INTRODUCTION.

THE history of the Arabs of Yaman under Islām has, as it seems to me, hitherto received less attention from Western scholars than it may fairly be said to deserve ; and hence it no doubt arises that readers desirous of information on the subject, find their endeavours to obtain it attended with almost insuperable difficulty. Lists of the dynasties have been included by Mr. S. Lane-Poole in his Catalogue of Coins at the British Museum, and he has added such brief explanations as the special purpose of his work would permit ; but, with that exception, the subject is in English literature simply a blank. And the labours of continental scholars, it must be added, are in this particular case, of less assistance than might be expected.

The only book that treats, in a European language, of the Muhammadan history of Yaman, is a small volume by C. T. Johannsen, written in Latin and published at Bonn in 1828. It is an abstract of the history of Zabīd by the Arab author Dayba', itself an abridgment, but one that supplies a historical sketch of the dynasties into whose possession the city successively passed, from the date of its foundation down to the tenth century of the Hijrah. Johannsen's work affords, therefore, a brief account of the leading families that ruled over Yaman previous to the sixteenth century of the Christian era. But some, to whom Zabīd never belonged, such for instance as the Zuray'ite Princes of Aden, are necessarily excluded. Johannsen's book is, moreover, at the present day somewhat rare.

A certain lack of interest in the fortunes of the petty states and dynasties of a country so slightly connected with the great streams of Muhammadan history, can without much difficulty be accounted for. It is no more than natural also, that the attention of scholars should be mainly attracted to the country as the ancient seat of an extinct and as yet little known civilization. But its history under Muhammadan influences is nevertheless neither destitute of interest, nor altogether uninteresting. Yaman, moreover, borders at the present day upon one of the great highways of the world. Its principal seaport has for more than half a century been in the possession of England, whose influence over the adjoining districts is willingly acknowledged by the inhabitants. A contribution to its past history may therefore, not unreasonably be expected to prove acceptable to English readers.

Of the not inconsiderable number of native writers by whom the history of Muhammadan Yaman has been treated, the earliest in date, and in certain respects the most important, is 'Omārah "the Yamanite." His reputation among his countrymen rests perhaps somewhat too exclusively upon his merits as a poet, but he is held in remembrance also as the leading historian of his native country, and as the writer to whom almost all is due that can be learnt of its history over a period of at least two centuries and a half. 'Omārah's successors have freely acknowledged the debt they owe him, and indeed, for the period in question, they have done little or nothing more than reproduce what he has written, in a more or less abridged form, whilst very generally retaining his actual words.

Whatever, therefore, the deficiencies in 'Omārah's work, it was to be expected that it would be carefully preserved. But so far is this from being the case, that until quite recently, no copy was known to exist. None has been included in the important collections of MSS. that have come of late years from Yaman, and, so far as I am aware, a general belief has prevailed that the recovery of 'Omārah's History was all but hopeless. The event has happily turned out otherwise, and a copy of the book is actually in the possession of the British Museum library, acquired in 1886, according to a note on the fly-leaf of the volume.

It is somewhat remarkable to find that the book has evidently been owned by a European. Not only is the binding of Western fashion, but other signs, pencil marks and the label on the back of the volume—Documents relatifs au Yemen—put the matter beyond all doubt. Another and indeed more singular circumstance is that the portion of the volume consisting of 'Omārah's History, is to all appearance a modern transcript, dating, so far as I can judge from the description of paper and from the style of writing, no further back than last century, or perhaps the early part of the present.

The volume (Or. 3265) is a small quarto. It comprises three separate parts. The first, of 85 folios, is Dayba's History of Zabīd. The third, 102 pages (52 folios), contains an account of events in Yaman from A.H. 1215 to A.H. 1258 (A.D. 1800 to 1842). The second part, consisting of 84 folios or 166 pages, is 'Omārah's history. Neither the name of the transcriber nor the date of the copy is given. The handwriting is not that of an accomplished penman, and the copyist, it may readily be perceived, could make no claim to scholarship. Errors, both of commission and of omission, are indeed numerous.

Even for the sole purpose of translation, the book, it was evident, would offer difficulty. But I had reason to believe that many deficiencies in the MS. would be supplied by the works of the author's successors. My expectations, it will be seen, have been amply fulfilled, and I have found it possible to print the original text, as well as to translate it, a task which without that assistance, I could hardly have ventured to undertake.

A life of 'Omārah is included in the Biographies of Ibn Khallikān (de Slane, vol. ii. p. 367). For his account of our author's earlier years, down, that is to say, to the time of his final departure for Egypt, the biographer seems to have drawn most of his material from the History of Yaman, in which 'Omārah touches upon sundry events in his own life. He was born, he tells us, at az-Zarā'ib, a town on or near the coast of northern Yaman, in the district of the Banu Ḥakam, the tribe of which he was a member, as shown by his denomination, the Ḥakamite.* His name and designations seem to have been Najm ad-dīn 'Omārah ibn Abi 'l-Ḥasan 'Aly ibn Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad Zaydān. On the title-page of the British Museum copy of his History, he is styled the Kāḍī; but there is nothing to show that he ever exercised the office of Judge, and we find him invariably spoken of under the title of Fakīh, the Jurist. He became a student at the College of Zabīd, as he himself tells us, in A.H. 530, and he was probably born not earlier than A.H. 515, the year mentioned by Suyūṭi (i. 238).

* Ibn Khallikān says, according to de Slane, that 'Omārah was born in the city of Martān, in the valley of Wasā', a place I am not able to identify. It will be seen that we have mention of Maṭrān (p. 68 etc.), but it is evidently not the place here in question.

His final departure from Yaman occurred in A.H. 552, when he proceeded to Mecca, and thence to Egypt. The spiritual head of the Fatimite Empire and Sect was at that time the Khalifah al-Fā'iz, who at the age of five years, had been raised to the throne on the assassination of his father aḡ-Zāfir in A.H. 549. The Khalifahs were still the nominal rulers of the Empire, but it was and had long been governed in reality by the Wazīrs, as they continued to be styled, although not only possessed of the fullest political power, but actually invested with the title of Malik or King, first bestowed upon one of their predecessors in A.H. 530, by the Khalifah al-Ḥāfiḡ.* The office, at the time of 'Omārah's arrival at Cairo, was held by Ṭalā'ī' ibn Ruzayḡ, under the title of al-Malik aḡ-Ṣāliḡ, the Virtuous King. Our author was already personally known to the Wazīr, by whom, on the occasion of an earlier visit to Cairo, he had been treated with distinguished favour, and who now again heartily welcomed him to his court. Ṭalā'ī', a zealous Ismailite, endeavoured to prevail upon 'Omārah to join the sect. He failed in his purpose, but continued nevertheless, throughout the remainder of his life, to extend his friendship and patronage to the Yamanite poet.

The Khalifah al-Fā'iz died in A.H. 555, and was succeeded by al-'Aḡid, the last of the dynasty. Ṭalā'ī' perished the following year.† His son was raised to his place under the title of al-Malik al-'Ādil an-Nāṣir, but was assassinated in the first month of A.H. 558. The dissensions that followed supplied the Atabek Nūr ad-dīn Mahmūd, Sulṭān of Aleppo, with a pretext for intervention in the affairs of the country. He despatched an army to Egypt under the command of the Kurdish General Asad ad-dīn Shirkūh. The re-instatement of Shāwar, one of the rival claimants to the wazirate was speedily effected. But the restored wazīr soon had occasion to direct his efforts to the object of ridding himself of his Turkish protectors. He solicited and obtained the aid of the Christian King of Jerusalem. During the next five years Egypt was the scene of a series of struggles, which soon resolved themselves into a conflict between the troops of Nūr ad-dīn and the Christian Crusaders for the possession of Egypt. Asad ad-dīn, the Atabek's general, eventually triumphed. The Crusaders were compelled to abandon the country, in which their rapacity and cruelty had caused them to be thoroughly detested. Shāwar was slain in A.H. 564, and Shīrkūh, though still acknowledging the authority of Nūr ad-dīn, was formally installed as Wazīr by the helpless Khalīfah al-'Āḍid, under the title of al-Malik al-Manṣūr (the Victorious King). He died before the end of the year, and his nephew Ṣalāḥ ad-dīn Yūsuf (Saladin) was appointed his successor and invested by al-'Āḍid with the office of wazīr, and with the title of Malik an-Nāṣir (the Succouring King), which he bore throughout his subsequent career and which he contentedly retained until his death.

In the first month of the year 567, Saladin, yielding to his own inclinations, as well as to the solicitations of his followers, and to the commands of his master Nūr ad-dīn, proclaimed the deposition of the Fatimite Khalīfah and the re-establishment of the supremacy of the Abbasides. Al-'Āḍid was at the point of death, and it is doubtful whether he ever knew that his dynasty had come to an end. The country was ripe for the change. It was accepted, out of Cairo, with scarcely a murmur on the part of the people. To them, indeed, hardly a sign of the great revolution that had occurred was perceptible, apart from an alteration in the form of the Khutbah, thenceforward recited in the name of the Khalīfah of Baghdad. But, ere long, a conspiracy was found to be in existence at the capital, for the restoration of the Fatimites, with the aid of the Christian King of Jerusalem. It was speedily suppressed, and the leaders arrested. Among those accused of being concerned in the plot was 'Omārah. He was found guilty and condemned to death. The sentence was carried into execution on the 2nd Ramaḍān, of the year 569, and his body was gibbeted and exposed to public view for three days. It has been said that it was by 'Omārah's advice that the conquest of Yaman was undertaken and the army of invasion placed under the command of Turān Shah, whose absence, in the event of the death of his brother Saladin, would, it was thought, afford greater assurance of success to the objects of the conspirators.

Among other noteworthy personages of that period, was the Kāḍī Abu 'Alī 'Abd ar-Raḥīm al-Baysāni, more commonly known as the Kāḍī al-Fāḍil. He had formerly held an important office as chief secretary under the Fatimite Government, and enjoyed a high reputation for general ability and for familiarity with the details of Egyptian administration. He was, moreover, widely noted for his talent as an elegant and ingenious letter-writer. The British Museum possesses two volumes (Add. 7307 and 7465) containing a collection of the Kāḍī's sayings and of his writings, which are still regarded by his countrymen as models of epistolary style, of a kind, it must however be said, generally too florid to commend itself to the taste of Western readers.* In personal appearance the Kāḍī al-Fāḍil was ill-favoured, indeed deformed. He was nevertheless exceedingly popular. Few names are oftener met with than his in the pages of Maḳrīzī's Khiṭaṭ. He was held in the highest estimation by Saladin, of whose cause the Kāḍī became a warm adherent, and who was in the habit of listening to his opinions, and of consulting him on the most important affairs of the State. He became possessed of great wealth, and among his charitable foundations was one, the revenues of which were applied to the ransom of Muslim captives from the hands of the Christians. He built also a college, which he endowed with a library composed of more than 100,000 volumes.† The Kāḍī, it remains to be added, was one of those who most strenuously urged upon Saladin the deposition of the Fatimite Khalifah.

'Omārah enjoyed for a time the favour of the Kāḍī al-Fāḍil, and it was at the latter's request, as will be seen, that the History of Yaman was composed. But between two men of such opposite character, friendship, if indeed it ever existed, could not long endure. Political events parted them, and 'Omārah, ere long, knew the Kāḍī only as an enemy. It is related, that when sentence of death was pronounced upon him, the Kāḍī approached Saladin and spoke to him in private. "My lord," cried 'Omārah, "listen not unto what he says concerning me!" The Kāḍī departed in anger, and Saladin, turning to the unhappy man, answered with the words: "He was interceding for thy life." 'Omārah drooped his head in silence. To himself, and to all present, the incident was a manifest sign that his fate was ordained by divine and irrevocable decree.

Whether or not 'Omārah was guilty of the crime with which he was charged, this much is certain, that he excited the mistrust and finally the hatred of Saladin's adherents, by his bold not to say reckless advocacy of the fallen dynasty, and by the impassioned words with which he was ever ready to defend it. On one occasion he was along with another poet in the presence of Najm ad-dīn Ayyūb, the father of Saladin, then inhabiting a palace or pavilion known by the name of the Pearl, formerly a place of resort for the Fatimite Princes, and still bearing the decoration with which it had been enriched for the use of its original masters. 'Omārah's companion recited to Najm ad-dīn four lines of verse, in which he spoke of the palace as receiving greater honour from the Prince's presence than it had ever derived from that of its former occupants. "The palace," he ended, "is a pearl, whilst they that formerly inhabited it were nought but shells. Thou art a pearl, unto whom the palace is but a shell." 'Omārah indignantly answered his companion, in lines of the same metre and rhyme. He dealt with the rhetorical figure in which the shell is spoken of as the occupant of a pearl, and ended with a line in which he denounces the poet as of less account than a dog, an animal which, at least, practises the virtues of gratitude and fidelity. The story is told by Maḳrīzi, who has preserved also a considerable fragment of a poem by 'Omārah, a lament over the fate that had overtaken the Fatimite dynasty. The following is the opening line, to which I add a few passages taken almost at random :—

Thou hast blighted, O Fortune, the noblest of hands—Thou hast stripped a graceful neck of the jewels that once adorned it. . . .

O censurer of my love for the sons of Fāṭimah. . . . Come, I adjure thee, cease weeping over Şifīn and the Camel,* and join in my tears over the desolate halls of the twin Palaces. . . .

* The battles of the Camel and of Şifīn were fought in A.H. 36 and 37, between the two contending parties into which the Muslim world had already divided itself. At Şifīn, although on the verge of victory, 'Aly was induced to agree to the reference of his claims to arbitration, and thereby brought about the ruin of Mayhap ye will return (O sons of 'Aly), that the world may be released of its bonds. . . .

They that have been false in their allegiance, will not escape the effects of God's anger . . . Their burning thirst will not be slaked by the hand of the noblest of created beings, the Seal of the Apostles. . . .

Love of the Imāms is the foundation of faith in God, and of all good works.

They are the divine Light of true guidance, torches piercing through the darkness of night.

The composition of that poem, says Makrīzi, was the cause of 'Omārah's death. And, indeed, if the verses have reached us in the form in which they left the author's hands, it is not surprising that he was regarded as an Ismailite, and, on the contrary, difficult to understand why he persistently refused to be enrolled as a member of the sect,* at a time when every consideration of ambition and self-interest must have urged him to do so.

'Omārah's History of Yaman, it must be confessed, is not such as can entitle its author to be ranked among the great historians of the world. The object of the book, as may be seen at almost every page, is simply that which he himself avows. It was written, not for purposes of instruction, but to amuse the leisure moments of a great personage. All that could serve the object is prominently and skilfully brought into relief. Matters of graver import are lightly touched upon, and some are, no doubt, passed over in silence. But in his own way, 'Omārah has preserved for us the leading facts of Muhammadan history in his country, down to his own time. The style in which he has written is one of perfect simplicity, and one which, in many passages, exhibits a natural sense of the picturesque, and a power of expressing it, somewhat remarkable in a writer of his nation and of his time. And finally, though not his least merit, 'Omārah has preserved for us an exceedingly curious picture of Arab life and manners, such, I may perhaps venture to say, as is only excelled in his cause, and the creation of fresh subjects of dissension among the followers of Islām.

By the twin palaces are meant the two great historic palaces of the Fatimites, the sites of which are still held in remembrance by the modern inhabitants of Cairo.

Arabic literature by the tales of the Thousand and One Nights.

The MS. of the British Museum is, as I have already had occasion to remark, very imperfect. Errors of all descriptions are numerous, and nothing is more evident than that the copyist has not, as a rule, given himself the trouble to understand the plain sense of what he wrote. Some faults are habitual, but of a class not unfrequently met with. Such for instance are the erroneous substitution of Alif for ya in defective verbs, the retention of the letter Alif in the word ibn when it ought to be omitted and its omission when it ought to be retained. The tashdīd and hamzah are, as a rule, omitted, even when the absence, especially of the former, prevents the true sense in which the word is used from being readily apprehended. The two points over the final ta in words of the feminine form are almost invariably omitted. All these are in addition to orthographical errors of a varying character and to omissions, sometimes of single words and at others of entire sentences.

Without speaking of omitted and misplaced diacritical points, I have said enough to show that it was out of the question to reproduce the text precisely as it stands in the MS. I have followed that course as a general rule; but wherever it seemed useful—perhaps in some cases where I need not have done so—I have supplied the missing tashdīd and hamzah as well as diacritical points. I have refrained from reproducing or noticing certain verbal errors, the correction of which could be made without any reasonable doubt and which, while in some cases an offence to the reader's eye, were in others calculated to produce perplexity, more or less momentary it is true, but likely to be an interruption to the reader. It may perhaps be considered that I have not been sufficiently careful to lay down to myself a strict rule, and I must, indeed, confess that I have not heeded a certain degree of inconsistency between what I have done in some places and abstained from doing in others.

Ibn Khallikān's Biographies, more particularly that of 'Aly the Sulayhite, Yāqūt's Geographical Dictionary, Ibn Khaldūn's History, and some other books, to be hereinafter more particularly mentioned, have each in their turn assisted me in the performance of my task. But my chief debt is due to the Histories of al-Janadi and of al-

Khazraji, of which it remains for me now to offer the reader some brief notice.

It must, however, in the first place be stated that, with one exception, 'Omārah mentions no writer on the history of Muhammadan Yaman of a period previous to his own. The exception is a history of Zabīd, written by Abu 'ṭ-Ṭāmi Jayyāsh, one of the early kings of the dynasty of the Banu Najāh. The book bore the title of Kitāb al-Mufīd fī akhbār Zabīd, the Book of Instruction on the History of Zabīd, under which it is mentioned in the Kashf az-Zunūn. That identical title is usually attributed to Omārah's own History, but it does not appear in the Brit. Mus. MS., which is simply entitled Book of Chronicles by the illustrious Kāḍī 'Omārah the Yamanite. Khazraji mentions that Jayyāsh's History was exceedingly rare in his day (see infra, Note 75). 'Omārah quotes the book at some length in his account of the death of 'Aly the Sulayhite and of the restoration of the Banu Najāh. It is highly probable that these passages are all that survives at the present day.

Janadi's work is mentioned in the Kashf az-Zunūn under the title of Kitāb as-Sulūk fī tabakāt il-'Ulamā'i wa 'l-Mulūk, Book of the Pearl-threads, containing the consecutive Series of Scholars and Kings. An excellent copy is preserved in the Bibliothèque Nationale at Paris, No. 2127, Suppl. 767. It is a large-sized volume comprising 207 folios, and is dated A.H. 820. It is written in a good and generally clear hand, diacritical points as a rule absent, but on the other hand, the vocalization in the case of names, both personal and geographical, is frequently specified with great care. The title of the book is absent, but its identity with that mentioned in the Bibliographical Dictionary is beyond all reasonable doubt. The copy at the Bibliothèque appears to have been the property of one of the last Princes of the Rasulite dynasty, Aḥmad, son of Sulṭan az-Zāhir Yaḥya who reigned from A.H. 831 to 842. The inscription on the fly-leaf to that effect is imperfectly legible through the edges of the paper being partly cut and partly worn away, and owing to slips pasted upon the sheet, but I read it as follows :

من كتب العبد الفقير الى كرم الله تعالى احمد بن يحيى بن اسمعيل بن العباس
بن (علي) بن داوود بن يوسف بن عمر بن علي بن رسول عفا الله عنه و عن
ا (ابائه ؟)

Al-Janadi's full name was Abu 'Abd Allah Bahā ad-dīn (Yūsuf ?) ibn Yūsuf ibn Ya'qūb, but he is best known by his surname al-Janadi, that is to say, the native of Janad, or it may be, member of the tribe of Janad, a subdivision of the Banu Ma'āfir.* He died in A.H. 732. His History extends, according to al-Ahdal, to A.H. 724, but in some copies it was probably continued to a later date. The work is really, as indicated by its title, a series of biographies, for the most part of men renowned for piety and learning. The author does not exclude princes and dynasties, but they occupy a subordinate place, for the reason he expressly gives, that they are of far less importance. He begins with the days of the Prophet, passes on to the Prophet's successors, and proceeds to sketch the lives of all who can claim the slightest connection with Yaman. He includes therefore the Imām ash-Shāfi'y, the originator of the Shāfi'ite school of religious law, of whom it has been said that he was born in Yaman. His account of the Imām is little more than a panegyric, in which he conspicuously dwells upon the contention that ash-Shāfi'y, had he not exclusively devoted himself to theology and jurisprudence, would have ranked as one of the greatest of poets.† At fol. 30 obv. commences a history of the Karmathians in Yaman, of which I have included a copy and translation in this volume. He then fairly enters into the subject that forms the main object of his book, the lives of the Jurists of Yaman, which he gives in geographical order, that is to say, under the heading of the places in which they were born or in which they abode.

* I find al-Janadi everywhere styled Yūsuf son of Ya'qūb; but he himself (fol. 21 rev.) gives his father that name, and Khazraji ('Uqūd, fol. 133, obv.), mentions Yūsuf ibn Ya'qūb al-Janadi, father of Bahā ad-dīn the historian.

† It was not without surprise that I found al-Janadi attributing to the Imām, in a tone of perfect gravity, certain lines of verse which, according to Ibn al-Athīr, were written by the Oḡaylite chief Abu 'l-Musayyib Rāfi'. Janadi says they were addressed by ash-Shāfi'y to his mother, when on the point of leaving her for the purpose of devoting himself exclusively to religious studies. A portion, of far too ardent a character to be directed to a mother, is not included. The lines, together with a translation, may be found in a paper I contributed to the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, vol. xviii. p. 518.

Al-Janadi tells us, in his Preface, that he has derived most of his information from the works of several predecessors—from the History of Ibn Samurrah, from the work of ar-Rāzi, from that of Ibn Jarīr, from ‘Omārah’s Mufīd, and finally from the collection of biographies of Ibn Khallikān. The notices of these works in Hajji Khalīfah’s Bibliographical Dictionary (excepting of the last mentioned), seem to be borrowed from al-Janadi and add little or nothing to what the latter tells us in his Preface.

The History of Ibn Samurrah is entitled Tabaḳāt Fuḳahā’l-Yaman wa Rū’asā uz-Zaman (the Consecutive Series of the Jurists of Yaman and of the Chiefs of their time). Its author was Abu Ḥaḥṣ ‘Omar ibn ‘Aly ibn Samurrah, who died, according to Hajji Khalīfah, in A.H. 586. This, says al-Janadi, gives the most complete account of the scholars and Jurists of Yaman from the time of the introduction of Islām down to a date somewhat later than A.H. 580. The book seems to have supplied al-Janadi with the model he followed in the composition of his own work.

Only second to Ibn Samurrah’s History, continues al-Janadi, is the work of Abu ‘l-‘Abbās Aḥmad ibn ‘Abd Allah ibn Muḥammad ar-Rāzi, a native, as his surname indicates, of ar-Ray, but settled at Ṣan‘ā. Many copies, says al-Janadi, are in existence, but all, he adds, represent themselves as being the third volume of the work, and though diligent inquiry has been made by the scholars of Yaman for the missing portion, the search has been unsuccessful. The volume in question, he continues, carries down the history to about A.H. 460. It has supplied him, he adds, with much that was deficient in Ibn Samurrah. The British Museum possesses a book (Or. 2903) by the same author, copied in A.H. 1090. The title is not given, but the book consists of legends and tales relating to Yaman and more particularly to Ṣan‘ā, not, so far as I have been able to gather, of much interest or value, and it is obviously not the book referred to by Janadi.

Next comes the History of Ṣan‘ā by Ishāk ibn Yahya ibn Jarīr, a descendant of al-Aswad ibn ‘Auf, brother of ‘Abd ar-Raḥmān ibn ‘Auf.* It is a book, says al-Janadi, of small bulk but of great value. The titles neither of this nor of ar-Rāzi's book are mentioned.

I come now to al-Khazraji, who, of all the writers to whose works I have had access, has been of the greatest assistance to me. His name was Abu 'l-Ḥasan 'Aly ibn al-Ḥasan al-Khazraji, that is to say, of the tribe of Khazraj. He was surnamed Ibn Wahhās, and he died in A.H. 812. Hajji Khalifah says that al-Khazraji was the author of three historical works. In one the writer, he says, followed the chronological order; the second was arranged in alphabetical order of the names; and the third gave a separate history of each dynasty.

The first of these is probably the History of Yaman under the Rasulites, of which the India Office Library possesses a well preserved and valuable copy. The book is entitled Al-'Ukūd al-Lū'lū'īyah fī akhbār id-daulat ir-Rasūliyah, "The Necklaces adorned with Pearls, being the History of the Rasulite Dynasty."* It consists of 367 folios. The author commences with a chapter on the pedigree of the Banu Rasūl, who, he declares, were of Arab race, descendants of Jabalah ibn al-Ayham, the last king of the Ghasānite dynasty. The history ends with the death of the Rasulite Sulṭān al-Ashraf Isma'īl in A.H. 803. Fully two thirds of the book are a compilation, for the most part from three works, the Sīrat al-Muẓaffarīyah, the 'Ikd ath-thamīn, and Janadi's History, from each of which long passages are incorporated.

The first mentioned seems to be a life of Sulṭān al-Muẓaffar Yūsuf (A.H. 647-694). The 'Ikd ath-thamīn exists in the Library of the British Museum (Add. 27541), under the title of Kitāb as-Simṭ il-Ghāly ith-thaman fī Akhbār Mülūk il-Yaman, written by Badr ad-dīn Muḥammad ibn Ḥātim, a descendant of the Hamdanite Kings of Ṣan'ā. The volume is composed of 114 folios, and it carries down the history of the Rasulites to the death of Sulṭān al-Muẓaffar in A.H. 694. The titles of the book so largely quoted by Khazraji and of that at the British Museum, though verbally different, have the same signification, and I feel satisfied, after comparison of several passages, that the two works are one and the same. It must, however, be mentioned that Khazraji gives, in his Kifāyah, an extract from the 'Ikd ath-thamīn, relating to the successors of Ibn Mahdy,* not to be found in the British Museum MS. It seems probable therefore that the books are two separate editions.†

* I have reason to believe that the text and a translation of the History of the Rasulites, or at least of its most important parts, were prepared for the press by the late Sir James Redhouse, but that certain difficulties unfortunately prevented the publication of his work.

Some other writers are referred to by Khazraji, among whom I may mention the Sharīf 'Imād ad-dīn Idrīs, a descendant of Suleymān ibn Ḥamzah. In the Ukūd (fol. 173 obv.), the death is recorded of the Sharīf's father, Jamāl ad-dīn 'Alī ibn al-Ḥasan ibn Ḥamzah, in A.H. 699, and Khazraji adds that the Sharīf Idrīs was author of several historical works, among others of one entitled Kitāb Kanz il-Akhyār fi 't-tārīkhi wa 'l-akhbār, a book which, if it is still in existence, will probably be found to throw light upon the history of the Zaydite Imāms of Yaman.

The other works by Khazraji mentioned in Ḥajji Khalīfah's dictionary are probably represented by the MSS. preserved in the Library of the University of Leiden, Nos. DCCV. and DCCCLXVIII. (Old Cat. vol. ii. pp. 173 and 196).

The last mentioned, despite its large size and its 369 pages, is but a fragment. It is entitled Tirāz A'lām iz-Zaman fi ṭabakāti A'yān il-Yaman. The book, according to the explanation of its plan given by the author in his preface, commences with an Introduction, containing in the first place a life of the Prophet, and next that of each of the Khalīfahs, from Abu Bakr to al-Musta'ṣim. A biographical dictionary, supplying an account of the scholars, kings, etc. of Yaman, the chief purport of the work, begins at p. 280 and the MS. ends abruptly at p. 369, before completion of the first letter of the alphabet. The author tells us that the book was composed by command of the Rasūlite Sultān al-Ashraf Isma'īl (A.H. 778-803), who, he says, prescribed its form and the arrangement of its contents. Al-Khazraji, it must be added, handsomely acknowledges the debt he owes to the earlier labours of al-Janadi. "We have drawn," he says, "from his abundant springs, and we have drunk under his guidance. Without him we had not ventured to enter so deep a gulf, neither could we have found our way to this our resting-place.”

The Leiden MS. dcccv. is entitled Kitāb tarīkh il-Kifāyati wa 'l-A'lām fīman waliya 'l-Yamana wa sakanaha min al-Islām. It consists of 384 pages. The author appears to have divided his work into five books, each subdivided into chapters, but the Leiden MS. contains the fourth and fifth books only. The fourth is divided into ten chapters. In the first five, the author, after citing certain traditions proving the high estimation in which the country and people of Yaman were held by the Prophet, gives an account of its conversion to Islām, of its government in the days of the Prophet and of his immediate successors, and under the Omayyads and Abbasides. The sixth contains the history of the Karmathians in Yaman, and the seventh (fol. 38) gives an account of the subsequent condition of Ṣan'ā until it was taken by 'Aly the Sulayhite. (See infra, Note 8.) The eighth chapter is the history of the Sulayhite dynasty, the ninth that of the Hamdanite Kings of Ṣan'ā, and the tenth that of the Zuray'ite Princes of Aden.

The fifth book is divided into twelve chapters. The first four (pp. 77-108) contain the history of the Ziyādites, of their successors the Banu Najāh, of the Abyssinian Wazīrs who became the actual rulers of the country, and of 'Aly ibn Mahdy; the fifth that of the Ayyubite dynasty. With the sixth commences the history of the Rasulites, and it includes the reign of Sultān al-Manṣūr 'Omar (A.H. 626-647), the first of the dynasty. To each of his successors one of the remaining chapters is devoted, and the work ends with the twelfth chapter at the same point as the MS. of the India Office Library.* The three last chapters of the fourth book and the first four of the fifth, that is to say, pp. 47 to 108, are for the most part an adaptation of 'Omārah's History. The author omits some passages and abridges others, often very slightly, and 'Omārah's language is frequently reproduced almost verbatim.

I have already had occasion to speak of a writer of much later date, Dayba', and of the small volume to which he has given the title of History of Zabīd. The British Museum Library possesses two copies, Or. 3265 and Add. 27540. It will be sufficient to add that the book is to all intents and purposes an abridgment and adaptation of a larger work by the same author, entitled Kitāb Kurrat il-'Uyūn fi akhbār il-Yaman al-Maymūn. The name of the author was Wajīh ad-dīn 'Abd ar-Raḥmān ibn 'Alī ad-Dayba', of the tribe of Shaybān.* He died in A.H. 944 (A.D. 1536-7). The British Museum possesses two copies of the work, Add. 25111 and Or. 3022. The latter is a modern transcript of a MS. belonging to the Khedivial library at Cairo, executed in A.H. 1295 (A.D. 1878). Add. 25111 consists of 191 folios. The end of the book is wanting, but according to the Cairo copy only one folio is absent.

The greater portion of the book is little, it might almost be said nothing, but an epitome of the Kifāyah. The author commences with Khazraji's fourth book, which he calls his first.† He reproduces it in an abridged form, chapter by chapter, in the same order as that of the Kifāyah and each under the same heading. Next follows his second book, Khazraji's fifth. The twelfth chapter ends at fol. 133 rev. To this he adds six more, in which he carries the history of the Rasulite dynasty to its conclusion. Then follows the third book, commencing at fol. 144 rev. It is divided into three chapters, containing the history of the Banu Ṭāhir, down to the end of the dynasty and to the conquest of Yaman by the troops of the last Mamlūk Sulṭān of Egypt. It will be seen, therefore, that it is only the latter part of the work, commencing at fol. 133, that can be said to be of any material value from the historian's point of view. In his Preface the author acknowledges his indebtedness to Khazraji, to whose book, it may be noted, he gives the title of Kitāb al-'Asjad.

Another writer to whom I have had occasion to refer in the following pages is al-Ahdal. He was the author of several works, of some of which the titles are given by Hajji Khalifah, and whereof one exists in the Library of the British Museum (Or. 1345). The first and last pages of the MS. are wanting and have been replaced by a fabricated title-page and colophon. There is, however, no room to doubt that it is al-Ahdal's work, the same to which Hajji Khalifah gives the title Tuḥfat az-Zaman fi 'A'yāni Aḥl il-Yaman. The full name of the author was Abu 'Abd Allah al-Husayn ibn 'Abd ir-Rahmān il-Ahdal al-Husayni, and he was member of a family of some note in Yaman, but originally from 'Irāk. He was born, according to his own statement, about A.H. 779, and was living in A.H. 848. He himself designates his work an abridgment of Janadi's History. It is, indeed, but little more, though it contains sundry additions, which bring it down to the author's own time. The British Museum MS. consists of 318 folios.

* The author of the Tāj al-'Arūs says that Dayba' is a Nubian word and that it signifies white.

† He begins, therefore, at the same point as the Leiden MS. of Khazraji's Kifāyah.

Al-Ahdal complains that his copy of al-Janadi was very imperfect, and he makes the following remarks on the subject:

وانتهى ما اختصرت منه وما تيسر من الزيادات و في الاصل الذي اختصرت
منه مواضع سقيمة و قد تحريت فيها بحسب الامكان و من تحقق خلا فليصلحه
وبالله التوفيق

Here end my abridgments from al-Janadi and the additions with which I have been able to supplement them. The copy of his book which has served me, contains many faulty passages, which I have striven to elucidate to the best of my ability. Let him who finds errors in my work correct them. From God cometh the aid that ensureth success.*

Of the geography of Yaman—excluding, it must be said, the portion of the country recently surveyed by Dr. Eduard Glaser—our knowledge is as yet very imperfect. I have endeavoured to supplement the information obtainable from Western authorities, by reference to the works of native writers, but the task is one attended with much difficulty. Hamdāni's Description of Arabia (he died A.H. 334) treats largely of Yaman, and the work is one the merits of which it is hardly possible to overstate. The well-known edition published by D. H. Müller has been of the greatest service to me.† But al-Hamdāni's Geography pre-supposes in its reader a certain knowledge of the chief features of the country, of the direction of its principal chains of mountains and valleys and of the situation of many towns. It is not possible to construct a map, however rude, from his descriptions. A correct map, showing the general outlines of the country, is on the contrary necessary for the purpose of enabling the student to follow the author in his descriptions. That published by Dr. Glaser in Petermann's Mittheilungen (1886, I.), may be said amply to fulfil the required condition. Indeed, a sure test of its excellence may be found in the fact that the student is able, with its assistance, to follow al-Hamdāni step by step, with hardly any other difficulty but that of identifying, in certain cases, the modern with the ancient names of places. And of that difficulty, in many important particulars, the reader is relieved by explanations supplied in the letter-press.

* Fol. 262. See also fol. 312.

† Müller's second volume, containing his notes and indices, had not yet appeared at the time I occupied myself with Hamdāni, nor did I become aware of its publication until after I had passed on to other matters. The book reached me, however, in time to be still of much service.

But, unfortunately, Dr. Glaser's map comprises only the northern part of the country. For the southern portion I have chiefly relied upon the map published by Manzoni in 1884 along with the account of his travels. Apart, however, from the delineation of his own lines of travel, the accuracy of which can no doubt be fully trusted, Mr. Manzoni has been compelled to rely upon the work of his predecessors, and creditably as his task has been performed, it is beyond all question that he is often led astray. The difficulties to be overcome by the student will be at least partially perceived on attempting to reconcile the great divergencies to be found between Dr. Glaser's and Mr. Manzoni's maps on the border country, where the two ought to combine into one, and where, on the contrary, their disagreement could hardly be exceeded.

During the course of my work, I marked down, for my own use, on a roughly drawn sheet, the situation, as nearly as I could arrive at it, of several places, the localities of which require to be understood in following 'Omārah in his history and al-Janadi in his account of the Karmathians. I have, with some hesitation, decided upon printing the map, such as it is. But the reader will understand that, so far at least as hitherto undetermined localities are concerned, I presume to do no more than indicate, more or less approximately, where certain of these places, or their remains, are to be sought—such, for instance, as Mudhaykhirah, Sharjah, 'Aththar, Ḥarad or Mahall Abi Turāb, az-Zarā'ib and others. Considerable difficulty in the attempt to determine the situation of some places is caused by the great changes that have occurred on the coasts of the Red Sea and of Yaman in particular. For many centuries past the sea has gradually but steadily retired, with the result that old harbours have silted up and have disappeared, and that new ones have been created, where at one time only deep water was to be found. See Dr. Glaser's remarks on the subject, p. 3. The coast line on the accompanying map is that of the Admiralty Chart.

The frequent inaccuracy of native writers—Yāḳūt, Ibn Sa'īd, Ibn Khaldūn and others—are a further addition to the difficulties that attend the study of the subject. Such, for example, are the misleading statements that Dhu Jiblah stood on Mount Şabir, that Mudhaykhirah and Aden Lā'ah adjoined one another, that Aden Abyan and the well-known seaport of Aden were two different places. Yāḳūt borrows (probably at second hand) much of his information from 'Omārah. In such case he adds nothing to what we have in our text. In others I have generally found that his information requires some scrutiny before it can be received. He seldom gives us the situation of a place with any degree of precision, and when he says, as he often does, that it is "near Zabīd" or "near Şan'ā," the assertion must always be received with caution. His Geographical Dictionary, in fact, useful as it undoubtedly is, is a compilation from writings of a very varying degree of merit, and, according to a custom unfortunately very common among his countrymen, he does not, as a rule, make known the source from which his information is borrowed.

The author of the Commentary on the Ḳamūs, known as the Tāj al-'Arūs, deals to a considerable extent with geographical names. He was a native of Yaman, and it might be expected that his great work would be of material assistance in the study of the geography of his country. But it is not so. He tells us occasionally, when mentioning a place, that he has visited it, but he adds no information of his own, and contents himself with simply copying the words of old writers and principally of Yāḳūt.

I have been hardly less disappointed with the extracts from Ibn al-Mujāwir, given by Dr. Sprenger in his Reiserouten. Ibn al-Mujāwir gives in most cases the distances in parasangs between places mentioned; but they cannot be trusted. They are not only in frequent contradiction with one another, but also quite irreconcilable with certain measurements obtainable, with small risk of serious error, from modern maps.

It is only by the labours of competent travellers, who may make the topography and the archaeological remains of the country an object of study, that any material advance in our geographical knowledge of Yaman will be achieved. I shall be well satisfied if the few notes I have collected in the pages of this volume prove of some little assistance to the explorer, and above all if I have succeeded in showing that a not unimportant and an interesting work offers itself to anyone able and willing to undertake it.

I have had occasion, when speaking of Janadi's book, to mention his chapter on the Karmathians of Yaman, a copy and translation of which are included in this volume. 'Omārah barely mentions the Karmathians, and it is hard to explain the omission, excepting on the supposition that the subject was not likely to commend itself either to the taste of his Ismailite patrons at Cairo, or to his own Ismailite sympathies. Al-Khazraji, in his Kifāyah, likewise gives us an account of the Karmathians, drawn from the same source as al-Janadi's. He has not, on this occasion, contented himself with borrowing at second hand, but has added nothing of material importance to the particulars given by al-Janadi.

I have, moreover, included the text and a translation of Ibn Khaldūn's epitome of the History of Yaman, extracted from his General History. Ibn Khaldūn, it will be seen, has fallen into sundry errors, chiefly, as it appears to me, attributable to his having placed undue reliance upon the works of his countryman Ibn Sa'īd. I have thought that a copy of his version, as it exists in the best MSS. would nevertheless, be acceptable to most readers. It is preceded by a slight sketch of the early Muhammadan history of the country, and the geographical details with which it concludes, though requiring correction in certain particulars, are not without interest.

The version of Ibn Khaldūn's text here printed is founded upon that contained in the Bulāk Edition, which however I have carefully collated with the valuable MS. in the British Museum Library (Add. 23272, fols. 68 to 79), of which it is consequently a reproduction. The chapter of the Banu Rassi has, in like manner, been collated with the MS. at the Bibliothèque Nationale, "Suppl. Ar. 742 M. fol. 50.

I had practically completed my task when I first became aware of an important addition to the Oriental Department of the British Museum Library, through the acquisition by the Trustees of a considerable number of MSS. relating to the Zaydites of Yaman. Some unavoidable delay occurred before I was able to examine them and the result of the work, though by no means fruitless, has, I must confess, been somewhat of a disappointment. I have found the Zaydite writers far more deficient in historical matter, properly so called, than I had allowed myself to expect. The particular information which, at the cost of no inconsiderable labour, I had sought in other quarters, and which I found for the most part in the pages of Khazraji and of al-Ahdal, could have been more easily obtained from the Zaydite MSS., but rectifications as well as additions have not been as important as I anticipated.

The two most useful works for my purpose have been the Hadā'ik al-Wardīyah and the Yawaḳīt as-Siyar.* Of the former the Museum Library has acquired two copies, each in two volumes, Or. 3785-86 and Or. 3812-13. It contains the lives of the principal Imāms down to the thirteenth century of our era, eighteen in number, beginning with al-Ḳāsim the Rassite and ending with al-Manṣūr 'Abd Allah.

The Yawaḳīt as-Siyar (Or. 3771) commences with the history of the Creation, with that of Adam, then with the lives of the prophets who succeeded him, and next with a life of Muḥammad, based upon that contained in an earlier work, the Jawāhīr wa 'd-durar (Or. 3911). At fol. 141 the Yawaḳīt enters into an account of the Zaydite Imāms, descendants of 'Aly. It is little more than a list of their names, and where fuller particulars are given, the author has for the most part copied or abridged the Hadā'ik. The book, which is evidently incomplete, ends at fol. 173, with the death of the Imām Aḥmad ibn Ḥusayn in A.H. 656, and with a few words on the dissensions that followed.

The other historical MSS. treat of special subjects, each however, as is likewise the case with the Jawāhīr, preceded by an account of the succession and pedigrees of the Imāms. Discrepancies in the several accounts of the succession are numerous, and the absence of dates so frequent that it is almost the general rule.

The Bughyat al-Murīd (Or. 3719) is an account of the descendants of 'Aly al-Amlahy (died in A.H. 977—A.D. 1566), a descendant of Yūsuf ad-Dā'y and grandfather of the Imām al-Ḳāsim son of Muḥammad surnamed al-Manṣūr, whom I have had occasion to speak in the latter part of Note 130.

The Kāshifat al-Ghummah (Or. 3791) is for the most part devoted to the religious opinions and controversial writings of the Imām an-Nāṣir li-dīn Allah, who reigned at the end of the seventh and beginning of the eighth centuries of the Hijrah. The value of the introductory portion on the succession of the preceding Imāms, is much impaired by the general absence of dates, even more noticeable in the present instance than in others.

It remains for me to express my sense of obligation for the friendly help I have received throughout the course of my work. I owe my acknowledgments to Dr. Rieu and Dr. Rost for assistance always so readily afforded in the recourse I have had to the libraries under their charge. To my old friend, M. Henri Lavoix, I am indebted for his never-failing good offices, of special service to me on the present occasion, in the furtherance of my work at the Bibliothèque Nationale. I am under great obligations to M. Zotenberg, keeper of Oriental MSS. at the Bibliothèque, and in particular for the favour he has done me in collating with the original the passages I have printed from al-Janadi. And finally I have to offer my thanks to Professor de Goeje for facilities so cordially granted to me at the Library of his University, for his kindness in revising with the original the principal extracts I have printed from Khazraji, and, let me add, for the pleasant memories with which my visit to Leiden is associated.

THE HISTORY OF YAMAN

BY

NAJM AD-DĪN 'OMARAH AL-YAMANI.

IN THE NAME OF GOD, THE MERCIFUL, THE GRACIOUS.

PRAISE be to God, the most meet to be praised, the most worthy of worship. His blessings and salutations of peace be upon Muḥammad the Prophet, the most pure in lineage, the most beneficent of apostles, and upon his family, the most perfect in knowledge, the most steadfast in judgment.

AND AFTER. In the year 563 I attended the receptions of the most illustrious and learned Kāḍi (al-Fāḍil) Abu 'Aly 'Abd ar-Raḥīm, son of the most noble Kāḍi Bahā ad-Dīn Abu 'l-Majd 'Aly al-Baisāni (native of Baisān). May God preserve his greatness and perpetuate his dignities. He was Chancellor and Chief Secretary to the Khalīfah al-'Āḍid. He urged me, nay, he guided me, to the composition of a book comprehending all that is preserved in my memory touching the land of Yaman, its plains and its hills, its dry land and its waters, the extent of its kingdoms and the course of its roads, the wars of its people and their battles, their memorable deeds and their achievements, the history of its Kāḍis and of its Dā'ys,¹ of its nobles and of its princes, of its poets, those of whom he had heard and those I had seen.

I obeyed his commands, and I placed reliance upon his indulgence on my work being submitted to him. He is not one in whose presence I feel overcome by the reverence with which I regard his exalted station, and were I not encouraged by my knowledge that judgment (upon my work) rests in his hands, yet would my own lowliness (through his graciousness) convert my fears into boldness.

It has been related to me by the Sheykh and Jurist Nizār ibn 'Abd al-Malik, the native of Mecca and by the Jurist Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad al-Ash'arī—and both are well acquainted with the histories of the people, with their genealogies and with the poetry—and I have also read in the book entitled Al-Mufīd li-Akhbar Zabīd (the Instructor on the history of Zabīd), composed by the mighty King Abu 't-Tāmi Jayyāsh, son of Najāh, Nāṣir ad-Dīn (Defender of the Faith), sovereign of Zabīd—the report that in the year 199 (A.H.) certain persons descendants of 'Abd Allah ('Obayd Allah) son of *Ziyād were brought to (the Khalifah) al-Ma'mūn son of ar-Rashīd. One, named Muḥammad, grandson of 'Abd Allah ibn Ziyād, claimed to be descended from ('Obayd Allah son of) Ziyād. Another represented himself to be descended from Suleymān, son of (the Omayyad Khalifah) Hishām, son of 'Abd al-Malik. Khalīf ibn Abi Ṭāhir, was of the Amīr Jayyāsh son of Najāh, was a descendant of that man.

Al-Ma'mūn, in reply to the Omayyad, objected that 'Abd Allah ibn (Muḥammad ibn) 'Aly ibn ('Abd Allah ibn) 'Abbas beheaded Suleymān ibn Hishām and caused his two sons to be executed on the same day. "I am a descendant," answered the Omayyad, "of Suleymān's youngest son, then his childhood. We form a tribe at Baṣrah, where we live in a state of obscurity." Another man, Muḥammad, son of Harūn, claimed to be a member of the tribe of Taghlib. On hearing his name, al-Ma'mūn wept and exclaimed: "Verily I am answerable for Muḥammad son of Harūn!" He referred to his brother al-Amin. He then ordered the two Omayyads to be put to death, but the Taghlibite to be pardoned for the sake of his name and of that of his father.

Ibn Ziyād thereupon exclaimed, addressing the Khalifah: "How falsely do people speak, O Prince of the Faithful, when pretending that thou art lenient, forgiving, and averse to shedding blood without just cause! If it be thy purpose to slay us by reason of our misdeeds, behold, we have not forsaken obedience unto thee, neither have we, in our allegiance, dissevered ourselves from the counsels of the nation. And if thou desirest to punish us for the crimes of the Omayyads against thy race, behold God, be he exalted, hath said:—No burdened soul shall bear the load that belongeth to another."² Al-Ma'mūn approved and commended the words of Ibn Ziyād. All his prisoners were pardoned, and they were more than one hundred in number. He placed them under the care of Abu 'l-'Abbas al-Faḍl ibn Sahl Dhu 'r-Ri'āsatayn, or, according to others, under that of al-Faḍl's brother, al-Ḥasan.

In Muharram A.H. 202, the proclamation took place at Baghdād of Ibrahīm, son of (the Khalifah) al-Mahdi (and uncle of al-Ma'mūn—in pursuance of an attempt to usurp the throne). At that same time a letter came from the governor of Yaman with tidings of the revolt of the Ash'arites and 'Akkites.³ Al-Faḍl ibn Sahl spoke to al-Ma'mūn in praise of Muḥammad ibn Ziyād, of the Marwānite, and of the Taghlibite. He urged that they were men of distinction, and unsurpassed in their capacity to render good service. He advised their being sent to Yaman, Ibn Ziyād as Amīr, Ibn Hishām as Wazīr,' and the Taghlibite as Judge and Mufti.* From the sons of the Taghlibite Muḥammad ibn Harūn, are descended the Kādis of Zabīd, known as the Banu Abi 'Aḳāmah, and the office continued to be inherited in the family until they were deprived of it by 'Aly ibn Mahdy, on the dissolution at his hands of the Abyssinian dynasty (of the Banu Najāh).⁴

The liberated prisoners accompanied the army despatched by al-Ma'mūn to Baghdād against Ibrāhīm, son of al-Mahdi. In A.H. 203 Ibn Ziyād and his companions performed the pilgrimage. He proceeded on his way to Yaman and conquered the Tihāmah (of Yaman),† after a war with the Arabs who inhabited that province. In Sha'ban, A.H. 204, the date of the death, at Miṣr (in Egypt), of the Jurist and Imām Muḥammad ibn Idrīs ash-Shāfi'y (the mercy of God be upon him), Ibn Ziyād laid the foundations of the city of Zabīd.⁵ In A.H. 205, Ja'far, freedman of Ibn Ziyād, started from Yaman to perform the pilgrimage, carrying with him a considerable sum of money and presents. He proceeded to 'Irāḳ, where he was received in audience by al-Ma'mūn. He returned to Zabīd in 206, bringing with him one thousand horsemen, including seven hundred adherents of the Abbasides of Khurassān. The rule of Ibn Ziyād extended itself, and he became possessed of the whole of Yaman, both of the mountains and of the maritime provinces. Ja'far was appointed governor of al-Jibāl (the Highlands), where he founded a city known by the name of al-Mudhaykhirah, situated in the district of Raymat al-Ashā'ir, possessing streams of water and extensive gardens.⁶ The country over which he ruled is known to this day under the name of the Mikhlāf of Ja'far. The word Mikhlāf, as used by the people of Yaman, signifies an extensive district. This Ja'far was a man of great capacity and astuteness. It was through him that the dynasty of Ibn Ziyād acquired its greatness, and for that reason Ibn Ziyād received a surname actually derived from the name of Ja'far. It was he who stipulated with the Arabs of Tihāmah that they should not make use of riding horses. Ibn Ziyād became master of Ḥaḍramaut, of Diyār Kindah, of Shiḥr, of Mirbāt,⁷ of Abyan, of Lahj, of Aden and of the maritime provinces on the Red Sea as far as Ḥaly. From Ḥaly to Mecca (may God guard it) is eight days' journey. He possessed also in the Highlands, Janad and its dependencies, Mikhlāf al-Ma'āfir, Mikhlāf Ja'far, Ṣan'ā, Ṣa'dah, Najrān and Bayḥān. Ibn Ziyād and his posterity after him caused the Khutbah to be recited in the names of the Abbaside Khalīfahs, and sent them tribute and valuable presents.

His descendants were Ibrahīm, son of this same Muḥammad the first of the dynasty. Next after Ibrahīm came his son Ibn Ziyād (Ziyād?), whose reign did not long endure. He was succeeded by his brother Abu 'l-Jaysh Ishāq, son of Ibrahīm, whose life was prolonged over a long period. When he had attained a great age, and his reign had endured for eighty years, some of the provinces separated themselves from his kingdom. Among those who manifested an evil disposition was the King of Ṣan'ā, a descendant of the Tubbas and of Ḥimyar.⁸ His name was As'ad ibn Ya'fur. The Khutbah was recited and the coinage was struck, in his province, in the name of Abu 'l-Jaysh ibn Ziyād; but As'ad paid him neither voluntary offerings nor contributions of stores nor tribute. His revenues did not exceed 400,000 (dinārs) a year, most of which he expended in charitable deeds and in hospitality.* The rulers of Bayhān, of Najrān, and of Jurash⁹ were likewise subject to Ibn Ziyād. As for Ṣa'dah, it became the scene of the revolt of the Ḥasanite Sherif (al-Hādi Yahya) known by the surnames of the Rassite and the Zeydite. It would not be proper to relate his history at this place, although¹⁰ there is not in all Yaman a larger, pleasanter, or more populous city than Ṣan'a. It is situated on the equator, and enjoys a temperate climate, so that no person requires throughout the course of his life to move his residence from one spot to another, 5 either for winter or for summer, and the length of the days in either season is almost the same. It contains a large building, now in ruins and reduced to a high mound. It is known by the name of Ghumdān. None of the (later) kings of Yaman have built a palace like unto it, or so lofty.

In the kingdom of As'ad ibn Ya'fur, Prince of Ṣan'a, is the mountain Mudhaykhirah, and it has been reported to me that it is about twenty parasangs in height. It contains cultivated lands and (running) waters, and it produces the plant known as Wars, † similar to saffron. The mountain is accessible by only one road.

Muhammad (read 'Aly) ibn al-Faḍl the Dā'y, (was?) known as the Sheykh of Lā'ah, and this place Lā'ah, which adjoins it, is a pretty village known as 'Aden-Lā'ah.¹¹ It is not the same as the seaport of 'Aden-Abyan. I have visited 'Aden-Lā'ah. It is the place at which the Alide supremacy was first proclaimed in Yaman, and thence issued forth Manṣūr al-Yaman. The Dā'y Muḥammad (read 'Aly) ibn al-Faḍl was a native of the place, and among others who came to it was Abu 'Abd Allah ash-Shīya'i, who proclaimed the Alide supremacyp in North Africa. It was there also that 'Aly, son of Muḥammad the Sulayhite, studied in his youth. It was one of the centres of the Alide mission in Yaman.

Muḥammad ('Aly) ibn al-Faḍl, whom I have here mentioned, conquered Mount Mudhaykhirah and established there the Khutbah in the name of the Alides in the year 340 (read 291?). Then it was retaken by the people of As'ad ibn Abi Ya'fur, but the followers of Muḥammad ('Aly) ibn al-Faḍl again recovered possession of it.

The mountain of Shibām was situated in the dominions of As'ad ibn Abi Ya'fur, Prince of San'ā. It is a strong place of defence, containing villages and cultivated lands, as also a great mosque, and it forms an independent government. Cornelian and onyx are found upon it. These are hard stones, the beauty of which appears when they are cut.

Among other governors of Abu 'l-Jaysh son of Ziyād, who revolted, was Suleymān ibn Ṭarf, ruler of 'Aththar. He was one of the Princes of Tihāmah. His dominions extended over a length of seven days' journey by two in width, namely, from ash-Sharjah to Ḥali. His annual revenues amounted to 500,000 ('Aththariyah) dinārs. Although he refused to attend in person at the Court of Ibn Ziyād, he caused the Khutbah to be recited and the coinage to be struck in the name of that 6 Prince. He paid him also an annual tribute and sent him presents, but I know not the amount thereof.

Among the Princes of Tihāmah who, like Ibn Ṭarf, recited the Khutbah and struck the coinage in the name of Ibn Ziyād and paid him a fixed amount of tribute, was al-Ḥarāmi, ruler of Ḥali, a Prince of inferior power to that of Ibn Ṭarf.

The portion of Yaman that remained subject to Ibn Ziyād in his old age extended in length from ash-Sharjah to Aden, a distance of twenty days' journey, and from Ghulāfiḳah to Ṣan'ā, five days' journey. I have seen a statement of the revenues of Ibn Ziyād in A.H. 366, and notwithstanding the reductions they had undergone, they amounted to a million of 'Aththariyah dinārs.¹² This did not include various duties he levied upon ships from India, nor contributions of musk, camphor, ambergris (spikenard), sandal-wood and china. It was exclusive also of taxes levied upon ambergris on the shores of Bāb al-Māndab, at Aden, at Abyan, and at ash-Shiḥr and other places, and exclusive of imposts on the pearl fisheries, and of tribute imposed upon the ruler of the city (read island) of Dahlak, comprising, among others, one thousand head of slaves, whereof five hundred were Abyssinian and Nubian female slaves. The Kings of the Abyssinians, on the further side of the sea, sent him offerings of presents and sought his alliance.

Abu 'l-Jaysh died in the year 371, leaving a child of the name of 'Abd Allah, or, as it is also said, of the name of Ziyād. The guardianship of the child was assumed by his sister Hind, daughter of Abu 'l-Jaysh, and by one of the slaves of Abu 'l-Jaysh, an Abyssinian eunuch of the name of Rushd. The latter [did not long survive, but he] possessed a Nubian slave known by the name of Ḥusayn ibn Salāmah, Salāmah being the name of Ḥusayn's mother. Ḥusayn grew up a man of ability and resolute character, and abstemious in his habits. On the death of his master Rushd he became wazīr to the son of Abu 'l-Jaysh and to the Prince's sister Hind. The outlying provinces of their dominions had fallen into a state of decay, and the governors of the fortresses in the Highlands had possessed themselves of the districts entrusted to them.

The Kā'id Ḥusayn ibn Salāmah made war upon the mountain chiefs and compelled them to submit.

Ibn Ṭarf and Ibn al-Ḥarāmi also re-entered into subjection. Ibn Salāmah recovered the original limits of the kingdom, and he founded the cities of al-Kadrā on the Wādi Sahām, and of al-Ma'kir on the Wādi Dhuwāl. He was a just ruler, profuse in bestowing alms and donations for the love of God (whose name be exalted), and following generally in his conduct the example of (the Khalīfah) 'Omar ibn 'Abd al-'Azīz. He ruled for thirty years, and died in A.H. 402.¹³

Among the splendid works executed by Ḥusayn ibn Salāmah must be reckoned the construction of great mosques and lofty minarets along the road from Ḥaḍramaut to the city of Mecca (may God Most High guard it). The distance extends over sixty days' journey. He dug wells and channels with running water in solitary wildernesses, and he erected along the road constructions on which were indicated the distances in miles, in parasangs and in stages. Some of these works I have seen, either in good order or in ruins, and of the remainder I have received descriptions from other persons, all agreeing with one another. The first stations were at Shibām and Tarīm, two cities of Ḥaḍramaut.* A series of mosques was built extending thence to Aden, to Abyan, and to Lahj, a distance of twenty days' journey. At each interval of one day's journey, there stood a mosque with a minaret and a well. As to Aden, it contained a mosque built by (the Khalīfah) 'Omar ibn 'Abd al-'Azīz, which was restored by Ḥusayn ibn Salāmah.

From Aden the road to Mecca divides itself into two, one of which ascends the mountains and the other passes through the low country (Tihāmah). The highland road is bordered by the mosque of

* See note 11. Of Tarīm, al-Hamdāni merely says that it was a large city (p. 87, l. 17).

al-Ḥawah (al-Juwwah ?),* a large building, which I have seen in good order, as erected by Ḥusayn ibn Salāmah. Of the other mosques on the highland road, I have seen that of al-Janad, which is like unto the mosque of Aḥmad ibn Ṭulūn at Miṣr. There stood formerly on its site a pretty mosque originally erected by Mu'ādh ibn Jabal, on his being sent to Yaman. Mu'ādh was one of the companions of the Apostle of God, upon whom be blessings and peace.¹⁴ The people of Janad and of the surrounding villages relate singular stories touching the merits of that mosque. They affirm that a visit paid to it, in the first week of the month of Rajab, is equivalent to a visit to the holy places of Mecca, or even to the performance of the rites of pilgrimage. The custom of annually resorting to it grew, until at length the practice^o was regarded as one of the religious ceremonies attending the pilgrimage to Mecca, and the building was looked upon by the people as a sacred place of resort. If one man owe a debt to another, he will beg to be allowed to remain undisturbed until after the pilgrimage, by which he simply means the visit to al-Janad. Next is Dhu Ashraḳ, where there is a mosque with the following inscription, carved in stone over the entrance: One of the mosques the erection of which was ordered by 'Omar son of 'Abd 8 al-'Azīz son of Marwān. Next is the city of Ibb, then an-Naḳīl, then Dhamār. [Thence to Ṣan'ā is a distance of five days' (?) journey, at each of which a station has been built.] Then the mosque of Ṣan'ā, a large building. From Ṣan'ā to Ṣa'dah is ten days' journey [with a mosque at each stage], and from Ṣa'dah to Ṭā'if, seven days. At each interval of a day's journey there are a mosque and reservoirs for water. Then the traveller reaches the pass of Ṭā'if, which occupies a day to him who ascends from Mecca, and half a day to him that goes down to the city. The road was constructed by Ḥusayn ibn Salāmah of such width that three laden camels can travel abreast upon it.

The above is the highland road. The Tihāmah (low country) road likewise divides itself into two branches. One, the maritime road, extends along the coast. The other, the royal highway, runs half-way between the coast and the mountains. The two roads diverge from Tihāmah (Aden?), and upon both, at each interval of a day's journey, stands a great mosque. On the maritime road stands al-Makhnāḡ, at a distance of one night's journey from Aden. It has a well eighty (thirty) fathoms in depth, which I have several times visited, as also a ruined mosque. Then al-‘Ārah, then^o ‘Athr, and next as-Suḡya, with a mosque, and a well forty fathoms in depth. Then Bāb al-Māndab, and then Mokha. Then as-Suḡhāri, al-Khauhah, al-Ahwāb, Ghulāfiḡah, Bī‘ah (?), al-Jardah (al-Ḥirdah), az-Zar‘ah (?), ash-Sharjah, al-Mufajjar (al-Hajar?), al-Ḳandīr (?), and ‘Aththar, which is the seat of an ancient kingdom.¹⁵ Then ad-Duwaymah, Ḥamiḡah, Dhahabān, Ḥali, as-Sirrayn and Juddah. These are the mosques on the maritime road, every one of which I have seen either in good repair or in ruins.

On the middle road stand Dhāt al-Khayf 9 (Khubayt?), Mauza‘, al-Jadūn (?), Ḥays, Zabīd, Fashāl, aḡ-Ḍijā‘ (written with Kisra to the letter Ḍad), al-Ḳahmah, al-Kadrā, which was the residence of Ībn Salāmah and was founded by him, al-Jaththah, ‘Irk an-Nasham, al-Mahjam, Maur, al-Wādiyāni, Jizān, al-Musā‘id, Ta‘shar, al-Mabny, Riyah and al-Fajr. Then the royal highway and the maritime road unite. They diverge on leaving as-Sirrayn. Thence to Mecca are five days' journey. The first building erected by Ibn Salāmah which is reached by the pilgrims, is Bayn (Bir?) ar-Riyāḍah, then Sabakhat al-Ghurāb, next al-Lith. Then they reach Wādi Yalamlam, where there is a well with an abundant supply of drinking water, ten fathoms in depth and five or six in width. Here the travellers separate into two parties. Those whose destination is Mecca find on their way Ibn Salāmah's buildings at Birād, next al-Bayḍā, then al-Ḳarīn, and finally Mecca. Those proceeding to 'Arafāt reach a well constructed by Ibn Salāmah in Wādi ar-Raḥm, thence to Na'man, and then 'Arafāt. He built also a mosque on Jabal ar-Raḥmah, at 'Arafāt. May God have mercy upon him! ¹⁶

I have been informed by the Fākīḥ (Jurist) Abu Muḥammad 'Abd Allah ibn Abi 'l-Ḳāsim al-Abbār, under whom I studied the Shāfi'y doctrines, that the following incident was related to him by his father, Abu 'l-Ḳāsim. The same was reported to me by 'Abd ar-Raḥman ibn 'Aly al-'Absi, and by al-Muḳry (the Ḳur'an reader) al-Ḥusayn, grandson of Ḥusayn, son of Salāmah. All these attained the age of nearly one hundred years. They relate that people were, on a certain occasion, assembling in crowds to attend the morning reception of Ḥusayn ibn Salāmah, when a man approached and said unto him: "The Apostle of God (upon whom be blessings and peace) hath commanded me to come unto thee, that thou mayest pay me one thousand dinārs." "It may be," answered Ḥusayn, "that the Evil Spirit hath visited thee in a false shape." "It is not so," replied the man, "and the sign between me and thee is, that for twenty years past, thou hast every night, two hundred times invoked blessings on the Apostle." Ḥusayn, on hearing these words, wept and exclaimed: "This I swear by Allah is a true sign, for none knew of it but God alone!" And he ordered the money to be paid. ¹⁷

ported to me by the Jurist Abu ‘Aly ibn Ṭalīk, who was a pious man and eminent scholar, and who inhabited the city of al-Ma‘kīr. It had been related to him, he said, by his father and by others his predecessors, all members of families distinguished for learning and for sober living. A man, it was said, complained in that valley, to Ḥusayn ibn Salāmah, who was on his way from Zabīd to al-Kadrā, that he had been robbed of a leathern bag, containing one thousand or, as it is also said, two thousand dinārs. This, he said, had occurred in Wādi Maur, which is several days distant from the place where he made his complaint. Ḥusayn ordered the man to be brought to him, and made him sit down among his followers (in the mosque of al-Kadrā). He rose to perform his devotions, and he prolonged them to an unusual length. He then lay down in the Mihrāb and slept, and the people gradually crowded towards the spot from all parts of the mosque. The narrator’s father said that he was one of those who approached nearest to the Prince, and he heard him command one of his followers to proceed with the man to such and such a village on the coast, to receive the property from so and so, son of so and so, and to do that person no harm. “For,” he said, “the Apostle of God (upon whom be blessings and salutations of peace) hath interceded for him, informing me that the person in question is one of his descendants, and hath acquainted me with the facts of the case.” The history of Ḥusayn and a relation of his good deeds in Yaman, would fill volumes.

Sovereignty over the dominions of the Banu Ziyād then passed on to a child of the family, whose name I do not know, but I believe it to have been ‘Abd Allah (read Ibrahīm?). He was placed under the guardianship of a paternal aunt and of a eunuch of the name of Marjān, one of the slaves of Ḥusayn ibn Salāmah, who exercised the office of wazīr. He had two Abyssinian slaves, vigorous men, whom he had brought up from their childhood, and whom, on their attaining manhood, he appointed to the administration of affairs. One bore the name of Nafis,* and was entrusted with the direction of affairs at the capital. The other was named Najāh, and he was the ancestor of the kings of Zabīd, whose dynasty was brought to an end by 'Aly ibn Mahdy in A.H. 554. He was father of the king Sa'īd al-Aḥwal, the slayer of the Amīr 'Aly ibn Muḥammad aṣ-Ṣulayḥi, who was Dā'y (guardian and propagator) in Yaman of the Fatimite doctrines and of the supremacy of the (Egyptian) Khalifate, at that time held by al-Mustanṣir. Najāh was likewise father of the most excellent and righteous King Abu 't-Tīb (read Abu 't-Tāmi) Jayyāsh, in whose hands and in the hands of whose descendants, supreme authority remained until the above-mentioned date.

- 11 Najāh ruled over al-Kadrā, al-Mahjam, Maur and al-Wadiāni, and these four districts are the finest provinces north of Zabīd. Jealousy arose between him and Nafis touching the exercise of the office of wazīr at the capital. Nafis was of a tyrannical disposition and was dreaded by the people, whilst Najāh was merciful, righteous, and beloved. Their master, Marjān, nevertheless inclined unto Nafis, and favoured him at the expense of Najāh. It was intimated to the former that the aunt of his master Ibn Ziyād, was in correspondence with Najāh, and that she favoured him. Nafis complained thereof to Marjān, who laid hands upon the Princess and upon her brother's son, and delivered them to Nafis.

The young Prince in question was the last of his race. With him the dynasty of the Banu Ziyād came to an end in Yaman, and their power passed into the hands of men, originally their slaves. The dynasty endured two hundred and three years (read two hundred and six years, A.H. 203 to 409), for they founded Zabīd in A.H. 204, and the dynasty ended in A.H. 409.

Nafīs, having gained possession of the Princess and of her nephew, caused them to be immured. They stood, praying for mercy, and adjuring him in the name of God Most High, so long as an aperture remained, and until the wall was completely closed upon them.

When the Ziyādites received tidings of the weakened condition of the Abbaside Khalīfate, of the assassination of al-Mutawakkil (in A.H. 247), and of the deposition of al-Musta‘īn (in A.H. 252), they appropriated to themselves the entire revenues of Yaman and, when riding forth, the royal umbrella was borne over them;¹⁸ but they tranquillized the minds of their subjects, by continuing the recitation of the Khutbah in the name of the Abbasides. When Nafīs murdered Ibrāhīm (or ‘Abd Allah), son of his master, and the boy’s aunt, he assumed the royal dignity, adopted the use of the umbrella, and struck the coinage in his own name.

Najāh, on hearing of the treatment his master had undergone at the hands of Nafīs, summoned his neighbours to his assistance, Arabs and non-Arabs. He marched upon Zabīd, and repeated battles were fought between the two rivals—the battles of Rima‘ and of Fashāl, in both which Najāh was worsted, that of al-‘Uḡdah in which he was victorious, and that of al-‘Irk in which Nafīs was killed near the Gate of Zabīd, with the loss on the two sides of five thousand men. Najāh captured the city of Zabīd in the month of Dhū ‘l-Ḳa‘dah of the year

412. He then asked Marjān: "What hath Nafīs done with thine own and our masters?" "They are in that wall," he replied. Najāh removed the bodies, prayed over them, and erected a mausoleum over their place of burial. Marjān was immured alive along with the corpse of Nafīs, in the wall in which the two bodies were found.

Najāh now adopted the use of the royal umbrella and struck the coinage in his own name. He entered into correspondence with the supreme authorities in 'Irāk, tendering them his submission, and he received the title of al-Mu'ayyad Nāsir ad-Din. He was empowered to appoint as Kādi whomsoever he chose, and to administer all the affairs of the country of Yaman. He continued to rule over Tihāmah, and to exercise control over most of the people of the Highlands, and he was styled King, both in the Khutbah and in official documents, with the title of Our Lord. He had several children, among whom were Sa'id, Jayyāsh, Mu'ārik, adh-Dhakhīrah and Maṣṣūr.

But the governors appointed by Ḥusayn ibn Salāmah in the Highlands, seized upon the mountain fortresses.¹⁹ Aden, Abyan, Laḥj, ash-Shiḥr and Ḥaḍramaut were taken by the Banu Ma'n, who, I believe, were not descendants of Ma'n ibn Zā'idah the Shaybānite.²⁰ Samadān, a place of greater strength than Duṃlūwah, also the fortress of Sawā, that of Duṃlūwah, the fortresses of Ṣabir, of Dhakhir, of Ta'kar (which commands Janad), also the provinces of Janad (Ja'far), of 'Unnah and of al-Ma'āfir were appropriated by a family, descended from Ḥimyar, known as the Banu 'l-Kurandi. They achieved distinction by generous and noble deeds, by their powerful rule and brilliant estate. The fortress of Ḥabb, which is like unto at-Ta'kar, that which bears the name of 'Azzān, that of Beyt 'Izz, that of as-Sa'r (ash-Sha'ir), a great fortress, that of Nūr (Anwar), an-Nakīl, and as-Saḥūl, the fortresses of Khadid, and of ash-Shawāḳi (Shawāfi). All these were conquered by the Sulṭān Abu ‘Abd Allah al-Husayn ibn at-Tubba’y, and by his son. Saḥūl is the place in which the cloth known by the name of Saḥuliyah is woven, of which two pieces were used as winding-sheets for the Apostle. The valley belongs to the Banu Aṣbah, a tribe to which the Jurist Mālik al-Aṣbaḥi, Imām of the City of the Flight, belonged.²¹ Sulṭān Abu ‘Abd Allah al-

 13 Husayn is he who contrived the stratagem whereby Sa‘īd al-Aḥwal, son of Najāh, who had killed the Amīr ‘Ali, son of Muḥammad the Sulayhite, was himself slain. The province of Uhāzah (also called Wuḥāzah), of which the seat of government is the stronghold of Baybars (Yarīs?), was likewise appropriated. Among its other fortresses are Dahwan (Zahrān), Yafūz, Sha‘r (Sha‘b?), and al-Khadrā. Its chief city is Shāḥiṭ. Nizār, son of the Jurist Zayd ibn al-Husayn al-Wuhāzi, wrote the following lines on the Sulṭān of the country :—

They told us the Sulṭān was at Shāḥiṭ.—He ascends the mountains from the barren plains.

I asked, Does the Sulṭān occupy the highest point?—Nay, they answered, he has gone down.²²

The fortresses of Wuḥāzah were conquered by the Banu Wā’il, who are descendants of Dhu ‘l-Kalā’. They are an ancient family of chieftains, but their people are a silly folk, who imagine themselves to be absolutely the noblest race descended from Adam. I may mention that I was once on a hot summer’s day travelling along the road from the market of Jabḥab (Jabjab), the greatest market held in the district, when I was overtaken by two horsemen of the tribe, who were urging on their horses with their heels, and whose lances were held by the riders pointed in my direction. I alighted from the beast upon which I was mounted, and I climbed up the side of the hill. The horsemen, on reaching me, said that the question who are the noblest descendants of Adam was in dispute between them, and that they had agreed to abide by my decision. One of them maintained that the Banu Wā'il are absolutely superior to every other race. The second contended that the Banu Wā'il and Banu Quraysh are equal in nobility. To rid myself of them I replied that the Apostle (upon whom be blessings and peace) is the noblest of all mankind, and that the Banu Wā'il exceed in nobility the tribe of Quraysh. One of the two men answered: "By Allah, hadst thou spoken otherwise, thou hadst not escaped me!" and thereupon they left me. The Sulṭān As'ad ibn Wā'il ibn 'Īsa, celebrated for his generosity and the theme of exuberant praise, is a member of the tribe of Wā'il.

The fortress of Ashyah, seat of the King and Dā'y Saba, son of Aḥmad the Sulayhite, and the fortress of Wuṣāb and its territories, were conquered by a family belonging to the tribe of Bakīl,²³ descended from Hamdān. Ṣan'ā and its dependencies were conquered by a Hamdanite family. That of 'Abd al-Wāhid seized the provinces of Bura', al-'Amad, and Li'san. They possessed themselves also of the fortress of Masār, which has no equal in Yaman, with the exception only of at-Ta'kar, of Samadān, and Ḥabb. It was at Masār, in Ḥarāz, that aṣ-Sulayhī first arose proclaiming the supremacy of the Fatimite Khalifah al-Mustanṣir. Ḥarāz is the name of the district, and its inhabitants are designated after it. They are closely allied with the tribe of Hamdān, and it was with their support that the Dā'y 'Aly, son of Muḥammad the Sulayhite, raised himself to power.²⁴

THE HISTORY OF THE DĀ'Y 'ALY, SON OF MUḤAMMAD THE SULAYHITE. THENCE PROCEEDS THE MOST IMPORTANT PART OF THE HISTORY OF YAMAN, AND THEREWITH THE SUBJECTS OF THE REMAINDER OF THIS BOOK, TOUCHING THE KĀDIS, THE DĀ'YS, THE DISTINGUISHED MEN AND THE POETS OF THE COUNTRY ARE CLOSELY CONNECTED.

THE Kādi Muḥammad son of 'Aly; father of the Dā'y 'Aly the Sulayhite, was a follower of the Sunni doctrines, and he exercised great influence over the men of Ḥarāz, who were 40,000 in number. When the office of Dā'y was transferred to 'Āmir ibn 'Abd Allah az-Zawāhy (ar-Rawāhy?), so named after a village in the province of Ḥarāz,²⁵ he applied himself to win the favour of the Kādi Muḥammad ibn 'Aly, father of the Dā'y 'Aly ibn Muḥammad, the Sulayhite. Az-Zawāhi was in the habit of riding to the dwelling-place of the Kādi, who was a man of authority, holding the dignity of a chief, and both virtuous and learned. He steadily persevered in his designs and finally won the affection of the Kādi's son 'Aly, then below the age of puberty, in whom he had perceived signs of future greatness. It is said that 'Āmir possessed a description of aṣ-Sulayḥi, contained in the Kitāb aṣ-Ṣuwar (Book of Delineations), one of the treasures of the ('Obaydite) Imāms, upon whom be peace.²⁶ He made known to 'Aly the revelations contained in the book touching the destinies reserved for him in the future, and the noble career he was to fulfil. He did this secretly, without the knowledge of the youth's father and family. Az-Zawāhi ere long died, bequeathing to 'Aly his writings and his learning. Before his death

'Aly's mind had become deeply impressed by az-Zawāhī's teaching. He was highly intelligent, and applied himself to study. Ere he had reached the age of manhood, he had become filled with know-15 ledge, by means of which and of good fortune, he attained the highest objects of his ambition. He was learned in the jurisprudence of the Imperial sect, and versed in the science of (mystical) interpretation (of the Ḳur'ān). He began his career as leader of the pilgrims, for several years, by way of as-Sarāt* and Ṭā'if. He alone led the pilgrimage during that time, and in his early years his condition gradually rose from lowliness to exaltation, from poverty to wealth. Illustrations thereof were related to me by the Jurist Abu 'l-Ḥusayn 'Aly ibn Suleymān. He was a man of advanced age, a poet, author of the following lines referring to 'Omar ibn 'Adnān the 'Akkite :—

Though my night watchings be attended with forebodings of evil—(yet I know that) Ibn 'Adnān will be unto me a protector from oppression.†

Similar circumstances were related to me also by az-Zibrikān ibn al-Fuwaykar (Ghuwayfar?), the 'Akkite, on the authority of a certain poet. He was the author of the following lines, part of an ode in which he satirized his own people :—

Who will buy the 'Akkites at the cost of a copper?— Behold I will sell them all, absolutely, and without the option of cancelling the bargain.

Both these men and other persons have repeated to me an anecdote related by the Ḳāḍī 'Omar ibn al-Murajjal, who bore the surname of the Ḥanafite and belonged to that school of religion, and who was a distinguished scholar. He said that near the gate of Zabīd, within the walls, there was the house of an Abyssinian of the name of Faraj as-Saḥrati (the Saḥrite) a man of benevolence and of exceeding charity. Whoever entered his mosque he welcomed and entertained. His thoughts were occupied with his guests, and he was in the habit of entering the mosque and of making private inquiries respecting them, without the knowledge of his agents and servants. He went forth one night and found in the mosque a person occupied in reading the Ḳur'ān. He questioned him touching his evening meal, and the man in reply recited the following lines of al-Mutanabbi:—

Who hath taught the mutilated negro the performance of generous deeds?—

His noble-minded masters or his enslaved forefathers? ²⁷

The Abyssinian took the man with him. He led him to the chief room of his house, and treated him with the most liberal hospitality. He asked his guest the reason of his journey to Tihāmah. Aṣ-Ṣulayḥī replied that he had a paternal (read maternal) uncle named Shihāb, whose daughter Asmā had few equals in beauty, and was unmatched ⁶ in literary culture and intelligence. He had asked her in marriage, and had been met with a demand for dowry exceeding in its amount the bounds of moderation, her mother urging that she should be married to none other but to one of the Hamdanite Kings of Ṣan'ā, or to one of the kings of the family of the Banu Kurandi in Mikhlāf Ja'far. They, in short, exacted a sum which it was wholly beyond his power to command. He was now, he added, on his way either to the Banu Ma'n at Aden, or to the Banu Kurandi in the district of al-Ma'āfir. The Ḳā'id Faraj as-Saḥrati, continued the narrator, supplied him with a large sum of money, double the amount that aṣ-Ṣulayḥī actually paid. The bride and bridegroom were equipped on a scale such as kings strive to provide when allying themselves with women of the most noble lineage. Aṣ-Ṣulayḥī returned, by direction of the Abyssinian, to his uncle and married Asmā. She was the mother of the king al-Mukarram, husband of the Lady, the Queen Sayyidah (the Lady Arwa?), daughter of Aḥmad the Sulayhite. Asmā was of a generous and noble disposition, liberal in the rewards she bestowed upon poets, and in the large sums she granted in furtherance of the service of God, of acts of benevolence, and of other good deeds. The renown of her splendid virtues extended to her children, her brothers, and her kindred. Her husband's poet, named As'ad ibn Yahya al-Haythami, spoke of her in the following terms, in an ode which commences with the words: "She of the white hands hath bestowed gifts:"

She hath impressed upon beneficence the stamp of generosity—Of meanness she allows no trace to appear.

I say when people magnify the throne of Bilqis—Asmā hath obscured the name of the loftiest among the stars.²⁸

Among other anecdotes of the Dā'y 'Aly aṣ-Ṣulayḥī is that related to me by Aḥmad ibn Ḥusayn al-Amawy, surnamed ibn as-Saḥāḥ (as-Sabkhah?). He held it from his father, who had been told the story by my informant's grandfather. He dwelt, he said, in the city of Ḥays, distant a night's journey from Zabīd. Aṣ-Ṣulayḥī, on conquering Zabīd, rode to the Court of the Kāḍī, and delivered to him a judicial deposition he had sworn in the days of his youth. Then, after some private conversation with the Kāḍī, he took his leave. After the Amīr's departure, the Kāḍī repeated what had been told him by the Prince. He had on one occasion, he related, come to the city of Ḥays for the purpose of gaining 17 intelligence touching the two slaves of Marjān, Nafis, and Najāḥ. He was met by a person who knew him, whereupon he changed his garb, and assumed the dress of an oil-presser, a seller of oil at one of the oil-mills of Ḥays. The statement of evidence referred to, he took to the house of a man of the name of as-Sabkhah. After he attained supreme power, an aged woman came to him with the paper in his handwriting. He immediately recognized it, and could allow himself no rest until he had fulfilled his obligation. His deposition, he said, was in precise accordance with what he had written at the time he undertook the duty. ‘Aly ibn Muḥammad, Kāḍi of Ḥarāz, bore witness to the truth of this anecdote, and he committed it to writing with his own hand, that under the will of God Most High, it might be borne in remembrance.

Another anecdote of aṣ-Ṣulayḥi, relating to the commencement of his career, was told me by the Sulṭān Nāṣir, son of Maṣṣūr the Wā’ilite, who held it from his grandfather ‘Īsa ibn Yazīd. ‘Aly, son of Muḥammad the Sulayhite, was, he said, leader of the pilgrimage by the road of the Sarawāt for fifteen (years). The people were in the habit of telling him, when he first rose to eminence, that according to what had come to their knowledge, he was destined to reign over the whole of Yaman, to earn a great name, and to be the founder of a dynasty. Aṣ-Ṣulayḥi censured and disavowed what was thus said to him, though it was a thing that had spread far and wide among the people, and was on the lips of all, both high and low.

In the year 429, aṣ-Ṣulayḥi raised his standard on the summit of Masār, the highest peak of the mountains of Ḥarāz. He was then at the head of sixty men, from whom he had received an oath of fidelity at Mecca in A.H. 428, during the celebration of the pilgrimage ceremonies of the month of Dhu ’l-Hijjah. They had sworn to stand by him unto death, in support of his work as Dā’y for the establishment of the Ismailite doctrines. Every one of his companions was a member of his family, and of his tribe, which comprised numerous and distinguished men. No building existed on the summit of the mountain. It was a peak, forming a defensive position of great natural strength. Before noon of the day following the night on which aṣ-Ṣulayḥī seized upon the spot, he was surrounded and besieged by 20,000 swordsmen, who reviled and insulted him. “Come down,” they said, “or we will cause you and all that are with you to perish by famine.” He told them in reply that all he had done was occasioned by his apprehensions for their own safety, as well as for the protection of himself and of his companions. If, he added, they would leave him, he would guard the place. If not, he would come down to them. Thereupon they departed.

Before the expiration of many months, he had erected buildings on the mountain and had strongly fortified the place. He remained at Masār, gradually increasing in power, from the year 429, the commencement of his career, concealing his purpose, that of winning adherents to the Ismailite supremacy.

18 He lived in dread of Najāḥ, the Prince of Tihāmah, but sought to win his favour, assuming a humble demeanour, but never desisting in his efforts against him, until he succeeded in bringing about the death of Najāḥ by poison, with the help of a beautiful female slave whom he sent as a present to his rival. Najāḥ died at al-Kadrā in the year 452.

Aṣ-Ṣulayḥī wrote to the Imām al-Mustanṣir (at Cairo),²⁹ asking permission to make open proclamation of the Ismailite doctrines and supremacy. He received an answer granting his prayer. He rapidly overran the country and conquered both the (mountain) fortresses and the low country. Before the end of the year 455, he had subjected the whole of Yaman to his authority. None of its plains or of its hills, of its lands or of its waters remained unsubdued. No parallel case can be found of so rapid a conquest, either in the days of ignorance or in the days of Islām. On a certain occasion when delivering the Khutbah (sermon) at al-Janad, he declared that on the day corresponding with that on which he spoke, he would, under the will of God, preach from the pulpit of Aden. A man exclaimed derisively, "O holy one, O worthy of praise!" Aṣ-Ṣulayḥi ordered the man to be arrested, and on the day he had indicated, he preached the Khutbah from the pulpit of Aden. The same man thereupon exclaimed, "O twice worthy of praise, O twice holy!" and forthwith took the oath of allegiance and joined the Imperial sect.

From the year 455, the residence of aṣ-Ṣulayḥi was established at Ṣan'ā. He brought thither the Yamanite kings whom he had deprived of their thrones, giving them places of abode near himself, and appointing governors over the strongholds they had formerly possessed. He built several palaces at Ṣan'ā. I was told by one of the citizens, Muḥammad ibn Bishārah, in A.H. 535, when he stated himself to be nigh unto eighty years of age, that all the palaces of aṣ-Ṣulayḥi were in ruins, and, he added, all who have built houses at Ṣan'ā, from that time down to the present, have made use of materials taken from aṣ-Ṣulayḥi's palaces. Neither the brick nor the stone nor the timber have perished.

As to Zabīd and its dependencies in Tihāmah, aṣ-Ṣulayḥi had sworn that he would appoint as governor only such as would pay him a sum of one hundred (thousand) dinārs. Afterwards he repented⁹ of his oath and he desired to appoint his brother-in-law As'ad ibn Shihāb, brother of his wife Asmā, daughter of Shihāb. She weighed out the money to him on behalf of her brother. "My lady," he said, "whence hast thou obtained this?" "It is the gift of God," she answered. "Verily, God bestoweth His bounty upon whom He willeth, and taketh no account thereof." * Aṣ-Ṣulayḥi smiled and understood that the money came from his own treasury. He received it saying: "This is our property which hath come back unto us." † To which Asmā quickly added (in the remaining words of the verse), "And we will provide for our kinsfolk and care for our brother."

As'ad ibn Shihāb entered Zabīd in 456, and distinguished himself by his just treatment of his subjects. He protected the Sunnis in the public exercise of their religion. He established his residence in the palace of Shaḥār. This is a building against which the assaults of Ruin are made in vain, and which Decay, the most powerful of kings, is unable to subdue. It was erected by Shaḥār, son of Ja'far, the ruler of Mikhlāf Ja'far.

"I was one day reposing," said As'ad ibn Shihāb, "and, as I lay extended on my back, I reflected over my affairs. Behold, I said to myself, aṣ-Ṣulayḥi is a man held in the highest honour, who has appointed me ruler over Zabīd, and regards me as equal to Sulṭān As'ad ibn 'Arrāf, to 'Āmir ibn Suleymān az-Zawāḥi, and to such and such other kings. My Lady Asmā has overwhelmed me with kindness, and whenever I measure my deserts by the increasing flow of her favours, I perceive how unworthy I am of her benevolence. On the other hand, I am wholly averse to laying my hands tyrannically and extortionately upon my subjects and subordinates. Whilst occupied with these thoughts I fell asleep. I was awakened by dust that fell and sprinkled my face, and which was charged with gold. I mounted upon the roof, and on examining it and the ceiling I found chests containing gold and silver and treasure exceeding in value three hundred thousand dinārs. I first set apart one third of the amount and expended it in works of charity. The second third I sent to the Lady Asmā, in discharge of my obligations to her. With the remainder I acquired unto myself goods and property, and I vowed unto God Most High that I would not oppress any of his creatures. I continued ruler of the province for fifteen years, and no arbitrary act during that period is, within my knowledge, chargeable upon my conscience."

Continuing his narrative, As'ad ibn Shihāb stated that aṣ-Ṣulayhī appointed three men to assist him in the administration of the country, who, in the performance of their duties, obeyed his wishes by entirely abstaining from all unlawful interference with the property of the people. One of them was Aḥmad ibn Sālīm, who had the superintendence of affairs from Wādi Ḥarāḍ to near Aden. He relieved As'ad of the cares proceeding from the contentions of local officials, and of the task of levying the imposts.

No sums were exacted from him excepting on distinct accounts, or in accordance with payments actually received. The second was the Kāḍi Abu Muḥammad al-Ḥusayn ibn Abi 'Aḳāmah, a descendant of Muḥammad ibn Harūn the Taghlibite, whom the Khalifah al-Ma'mūn appointed as Chief Judge over Yaman in conjunction with Ibn Ziyād. He was As'ad's deputy in administering the sacred law, and in the execution of his duties, he displayed sound judgment and effectually protected the people from wrong.* The third was Abu 'l-Ḥasan 'Aly ibn

* The above doubtless conveys the general sense intended by the writer, but I am not able to translate the passage, as it stands in our text, without considerable hesitation.

Muḥammad al-Ḳumm, father of Ḥusayn ibn 'Aly ibn Muḥammad al-Ḳumm, the poet, and one of the most distinguished of men for generosity, for his fitness to command, and for his business abilities. He was, moreover, a distinguished poet, and it was he who wrote in a short piece the following line touching his brother, whom he reproached for the exaggerated affection he displayed towards his son Ḥusayn :—

Behold him ever watching—his sons. Truly all men are not manly.

Abu 'l-Ḥasan 'Aly, it was stated by As'ad ibn Shihāb, was placed with him as wazīr and private secretary by his master, the Dā'y 'Aly ibn Muḥammad aṣ-Ṣulayḥi. The Prince and the Lady Asmā gave him strict orders to decide nothing without first consulting 'Aly ibn al-Ḳumm. "I used to send him each year," said Ibn Shihāb, "as my delegate to Ṣan'ā, accompanied by Aḥmad ibn Sālim, governor of Tihāmah. I levied every year from Tihāmah, in money alone, a sum of one million of dinārs, and my two friends invariably returned to me with presents from my master and mistress, amounting to fifty thousand dinārs, which I divided with my followers."

Among other events in the life of the Amir 'Aly ibn Muḥammad aṣ-Ṣulayḥi, it is related, that in the year 460, he received intelligence that Ibn Ṭarf had been joined by the Kings of Abyssinia and by a 21 mixed multitude of Africans. Aṣ-Ṣulayḥi marched against them at the head of two thousand seven hundred horsemen. The two armies met at az-Zarā'ib, in the dominion of Ibn Ṭarf, the place in which I was born and which my family inhabits to the present day. The Arabs on the first day suffered severe losses. Then, however, Fortune turned against the Blacks, and their force was reduced to one thousand men, whom my grandfather, Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad, received in his castle at 'Ukwah. Al-'Ukwatāni (the two 'Ukwahs) are two mountains of great natural strength, which no one would willingly attack. They are the places mentioned by the leader of the Caravan of pilgrims, when he says, addressing his eyes inflamed with want of sleep,—

When ye behold the two mountains of 'Akād,
And when the two 'Ukwas rise before you,
Rejoice, O weary eyes, at the prospect of rest.

The two mountains of 'Akād look down upon the city of az-Zarā'ib, and their inhabitants have preserved the Arabic language in its purity from pre-Islamic days down to the present. Their speech has been preserved from corruption, through their refraining from intermarriage, or association with townspeople. They are a sedentary people, who do not wander or quit their homes.³⁰

I may mention that in the year 530, being then under twenty years of age, I came to Zabīd for the purpose of studying jurisprudence. The Professors of all the Colleges were much surprised to find that I never committed a solecism in speaking. "I take oath by God Most High," said the Jurist Naṣr Allāh ibn Sālim, "that this youth has made a deep study of grammar." After a considerable lapse of time, friendship having been established between us, he used, whenever we met, to exclaim: "Welcome he on whose account I have forsworn myself." When my father visited me at Zabīd, along with seven of my brethren, I arranged a meeting between them and the Jurists. They conversed together and by Allāh, with one exception, no solecism was committed by my friends, whilst the author of that single inaccuracy of language was immediately reproved by his companions.

But let us return to the history of the Dā'y 'Aly ibn Muḥammad the Sulayhite. I myself have seen the bones and horses hoofs, that are uncovered on the battle-field, and exposed to view whenever a 22 violent wind blows. After visiting Zabīd, aṣ-Sulayḥi returned to Ṣan'ā (may God guard it), and he remained there for twelve years without moving from the city.

Among other passages in the history of Yaman is the story of the slaughter of the Dā'y 'Aly the Sulayhite, an event which occurred on the twelfth of the month of Dhu 'l-Ka'dah of the year 473, or as it is also said of the year 459, and the latter is the correct version.³¹ The Amīr, the Glorious Da'y, the Triumphant in the wars for the Faith, the Friend of the Prince of the Faithful, 'Aly, son of Muḥammad the Sulayhite, had appointed as governors over the fortresses and highlands persons whom he could trust. Having determined upon going to Mecca (may God Most High guard it), he resolved to take with him the kings (to whom he had given places of abode at Ṣan'ā), and also the Lady Asmā, daughter of Shihāb, and mother of the king al-Mukarram. He made the latter governor of Ṣan'ā, and appointed him his deputy. He set forth at the head of two thousand horsemen, of whom one hundred and sixty were members of the Sulayḥi tribe. On reaching al-Mahjam he halted on a cultivated tract, near the outskirts of the city, known under the name of Umm ad-Duhaym, and also under that of Bīr (Well of) Umm Ma'bad. He encamped his soldiers, and placed around his own tent the Princes, among whom were Ma'n (read Aly?) ibn Ma'n, Ibn al-Kurandy, Ibn at-Tubba'y, Wā'il ibn 'Īsa al-Wuḥāzy, and others, all of whom he had brought with him for fear of their raising a revolt against him during his absence. Suddenly and without warning the news spread among his people, who were occupying themselves with their personal affairs, scattered and divided into separate parties, that the Amir 'Aly and his brother 'Abd Allah ibn Muḥammad the Sulayhite had both been beheaded. The troops were surrounded, and not a man escaped. Power passed into the hands of Sa'īd, son of Najāh al-Aḥwal, who caused the men to be massacred by his spearmen. He spared Wā'il ibn 'Īsa al-Wuḥāzy, Ibn Ma'n, and Ibn al-Kurandy, but he slew the others, and captured Asmā, daughter of Shihāb and mother of the king al-Mukarram. Sa'īd then started from al-Mahjam on his way back to Zabīd, with the two heads borne in front of the Princess's litter. On his arrival at Zabīd he raised them on high, opposite the casement of a house he assigned for her residence. And Asmā remained a full year the captive of Sa'īd ibn Najāh.

HOW THE KING AL-MUKARRAM AḤMAD, SON OF 'ALY, SON OF MUḤAMMAD AṢ-SULAYḤI, SUPREME CHIEF OF THE ARABS, SULTĀN UNDER THE PRINCE OF THE FAITHFUL, PROCEEDED FROM ṢAN'Ā TO ZABĪD TO RELEASE HIS MOTHER ASMĀ, DAUGHTER OF SHIHĀB, FROM HER CAPTIVITY.

It is related that all attempts to transmit a letter from Asmā to al-Mukarram, or from him to his mother, having failed, the Princess herself devised an artifice whereby the object was accomplished. She hid a letter in a cake of bread, and contrived means by which it was given to a mendicant. The latter transmitted the letter to al-Mukarram, who received it in the month of Shawwāl of the year 475. The Princess wrote to her son as follows: "I am great with child by the squint-eyed slave (al-Aḥwal).³² See that thou come unto me before my delivery. If not, everlasting disgrace will ensue."

Al-Mukarram, on reading the letter, assembled his friends and showed it them. They burst into lamentations, but soon became eager to vindicate the honour of their tribe. Al-Mukarram marched from Ṣan'ā at the head of a body of three thousand horsemen, whom he had sworn to fidelity, whose assistance he claimed, and whose spirit he stimulated by his addresses. He was an eloquent speaker and a brave warrior, widely known for his resolute character as well as for his bravery. No one in his day was his equal in strength and stature, or able to wield his arms, his lance, his sword, and his bow. At each halting-place he exhorted the people, saying that whosoever cared only for the preservation of his life should not be one of them. Sixteen hundred horsemen * from among his allies steadfastly adhered to him, and fourteen hundred drew back.

I have been told by the Sheykh and Jurist al-Mukri (the Qur'an teacher) Suleymān son of Yā-Sīn that the following anecdote was related to him by the pious Sheykh Muḥammad son of 'Ulayyah. "I was on a certain Friday," said Sheykh Muḥammad, "at near the hour of daybreak, in the mosque of Turaybah. The country people had taken refuge 24 in the city of Zabīd out of fear of the Arabs. I was engaged in a recitation of the entire Qur'an, and had reached the chapter commencing with the words, By the Heavens containing the mansions of the stars.† I had no other occupation and the mosque in which I sat, stood on a desolate spot. I was suddenly startled by the arrival of a horseman, whom I could not distinctly see on account of the still lingering darkness. He deposited his lance on the ground, with its point resting against the wall of the western aisle, in which I was seated. Then he dismounted, and a person approached me, than whom I have seen none among the sons of Adam of more perfect form, or of more noble appearance, a man of kingly aspect. Standing up at my side he performed his morning devotions. The early light soon began to shine, and I perceived that the stem of his lance was a Kulamite cane (or bamboo), an equal to which could not be met with.* His horse resembled (in its powerful appearance) a beast of burden. He desired me to finish the section of the Qur'ān upon which I was engaged. I obeyed and he listened to my chanting. He then desired me to pray. I did so, and to each of my petitions he responded with ejaculations of Amen. The sun now rose, and horsemen began to issue forth in detachments and troops from the hollows of the plain. Each party as it came forward saluted the Chief and then stood still. The words they used were, 'God grant a day of bounteous grace unto our Lord, and perpetuate his renown!' In his reply he confined himself to the words, 'Welcome, ye Arab nobles!' On their number being complete, certain persons came forth unto him at the mosque. The only one known to me was As'ad ibn Shihāb, with whom I was acquainted, seeing that he had been governor over us citizens of Zabīd. I inquired of him who were these persons. 'That man,' he answered, 'is al-Mukarram, al-Malik as-Sa'id (the auspicious king) Aḥmad ibn 'Aly, the Sulayhite, that is al-Karam † the Yāmīte, and that is 'Āmir az-Zawāḥi, the most generous Arab that ever bestrode a horse.' The men called upon a fourth to come forward, but he declined. He was the paternal uncle of As'ad ibn Shihāb and of the Lady Asmā, and not inferior to the other four in nobility of race or in personal merit. Then al-Mukarram arose and addressed them, speaking so that he could be clearly heard. The following passage of his speech has remained in my memory :—

25 'O ye believers, if the undertaking upon which ye have entered were but newly resolved upon, I would of a certainty seek to sharpen your determination. But I will not now add to what ye heard from me yesterday, and to what I have said before yesterday. The words I have spoken are sufficient. I offered you the option of returning when the distance ye had travelled still permitted you to draw back. But now the choice is with your enemy. Ye have penetrated into his country as into a lion's den, and your only alternatives are to encounter death or to suffer dishonour by unavailing flight.' "

He then recited the words of Abu 'ṭ-Ṭayyib al-Mutanabbi, as follows :—

"Grasping my death-dealing sword, I will go down among my foes, —
A field whence only they return who deal effectual blows." *

The Abyssinians had assembled to the number of twenty thousand foot. The right wing of the Arab force was under the command of As'ad ibn Shihāb, and the left under that of his uncle. "Ye are not," said al-Mukarram, "like unto the other members of this army. Ye have personal wrongs to avenge, for our lady is sister to one of you and niece to the other." Al-Mukarram himself took command of the centre. The two armies entered into action. The centre of the Abyssinians fought strenuously for a time, but the two wings closed upon them. The Abyssinians were defeated, and immense numbers were slain. Sa'īd ibn Najāh and those surrounding him fled from the field and took refuge in Dahlak and its neighbouring islands. The slaughter of the Abyssinians, near the gate of the city, ceased not until the hour of midday prayer. The first warrior to reach the spot where the two heads were set up, and to stand below the casement of Asmā, daughter of Shihāb, was her son, al-Mukarram Aḥmad. He said unto her, and she did not recognize him, "May God safeguard and perpetuate thy renown, O our lady." "Welcome," she replied, "O noble Arab!" Al-Mukarram's two companions saluted her in the same words as his. She asked him who he was, to which he answered that his name was Aḥmad, son of 'Aly son of Muḥammad. "Verily the name Aḥmad son of 'Aly," she answered, "is borne by many Arabs. Uncover thy face that I may know thee." He raised his helmet, whereupon she exclaimed, "Welcome, our Lord al-Mukarram!"

At that moment he was struck by the wind, a shudder passed over him, and his face was contracted by a spasm. He lived many years thereafter, but continued subject to involuntary movements of the head and spasms in his face. She then asked who were his two companions, and he named them. Upon one she conferred a grant of the revenues of Aden for that year, amounting to one hundred thousand dinārs. To the other she gave the two fortresses of Kaukabān and Ḥaubān (?), together with their territories, the assessments upon which are not inferior to the revenues of Aden.

Then the army entered by detachments, whilst she stood at the casement with her face uncovered. Such had been her custom in the days of her husband, a sign of her exalted rank over the men from whom other women are secluded. Al-Mukarram ordered the two heads to be taken down, and he erected over them a mausoleum, which I have known as the Mausoleum of the Two Heads (Mashhad ar-Ra'sayn). It is said that when al-Mukarram uncovered his face Asmā exclaimed:

“He whose coming is like unto thy coming hath not tarried, neither hath he erred.”

The statement in her letter, that she was with child by the slave Sa‘īd, son of Najāh, was not actually true, but she thought thereby to excite and stimulate her son to the vindication of his honour. Al-Mukarram’s heralds now proclaimed his orders to unsheathe the sword against the people of the captured city. But he warned the army that the Arabs of Tihāmah beget children by black concubines, and that a black skin was common to both slave and free. “But if ye hear a person pronounce the word azm, azm (as if it were written with the letter z), know that he is an Abyssinian and slay him. If he pronounce it azm (with the letter z), he is an Arab, and ye shall spare him.”

He appointed his maternal uncle, Aḥmad (As‘ad? see below) ibn Shihāb, to be ruler over Tihāmah as before, and he then departed for San‘ā, serene in mind after his victory, and accompanied by Asmā, daughter of Shihāb. A saying became common among the people of Zabīd which has been preserved down to my own time. If a man of the lower classes revile one of his neighbours, and if he be reproached for his evil language towards the man, he will answer: “By Allah! the man who took his mother from Zabīd, and who slew on her account twenty thousand Abyssinians, by my life! he was truly a man!”³³

Al-Mukarram having appointed his maternal uncle As‘ad ibn Shihāb to the rulership over Zabīd and its dependencies, (joined with him?) on that occasion Aḥmad ibn Sālim. As‘ad sent him to San‘ā in charge of the tribute of the province of Tihāmah. Asmā distributed the greater part among the Arab envoys. Aḥmad ibn Sālim thereupon began to tear his beard, saying:—“I have passed through fire for the sake of this money, and see now what has been done with it!" "If money be not spent upon those who are deserving of it," answered Asmā, "then it is but vanity and unprofitableness."

But she wrote to her brother As'ad ibn Shihāb desiring him to pay twenty thousand dinārs to Aḥmad ibn Sālīm out of the current year's revenue, as a present and mark of good-will.

Not long after, Asmā, daughter of Shihāb, died, at San'ā, in the year 497.* That same year al-Mukarram ordered the Maliki dinārs to be struck. They are so named after him, and they are the dinārs of Yaman. The inscription they bear is the following: The King and Lord al-Mukarram, Supreme Chief of the Arabs, Sultān under the Prince of the Faithful. They continued to be struck according to that design until the present day (that is to say), until the Dā'y 'Imrān ibn Muḥammad ibn Saba the Zuray'ite made the inscription as follows: *The Unparagoned among the Kings of the age, King of the Arabs and of Yaman, 'Imrān, son of Muḥammad.*³⁴

In that same year the Banu Najāh returned. They drove Aḥmad (read As'ad?) ibn Shihāb out of Zabīd, and made themselves masters of the city. But they were themselves again expelled by al-Mukarram ibn 'Aly, and Sa'id al-Aḥwal, son of Najāh, was killed under the walls of the fortress of ash-Sha'ir, the result of a stratagem effected by the Sultān Abu 'Abd Allah at-Tubba'i, the particulars of which will be recounted in the history of the Honourable Lady the Queen Sayyidah, daughter of Aḥmad. The death of Sa'id al-Aḥwal took place in the year 481. That same year Jayyāsh, son of Najāh, together with the wazīr Khalf ibn Abi Ṭāhir the Omayyad, escaped in disguise to Aden, and travelled thence to India. There they remained for six months, and then returned to Zabīd, which they conquered before the expiration of the year. At that period As'ad ibn 'Arrāf was named ruler of Zabīd, and 'Aly ibn al-Ḳumm, son (read father) of al-Ḥusayn ibn 'Aly ibn al-Ḳumm the poet, was appointed his wazīr and private secretary, in accordance with the precedent of his former appointment under As'ad ibn Shihāb. There are persons²⁸ who affirm that 'Aly, son (read father) of Ḥusayn, son of 'Aly ibn al-Ḳumm, ruled over Zabīd, under As'ad ibn Shihāb, before the appointment of As'ad ibn 'Arrāf.³⁵

THE HISTORY OF THE HONOURABLE LADY THE QUEEN
SAYIDDAH, DAUGHTER OF AḤMAD.

HER name was Sayyidah, daughter of Aḥmad, son of Ja'far, son of Mūsa the Sulayhite, and her mother was ar-Radāh, daughter of al-Fāri', son of Mūsa. Ar-Radāh was left a widow by the death of her husband Aḥmad, father of the Lady Sayyidah, and she then married 'Āmir, son of Suleymān, son of 'Āmir, son of 'Abd Allah az-Zawāḥi, to whom she bore Suleymān, son of 'Āmir, son of 'Abd Allah the Zawāhite. The latter was therefore half brother to the Lady Sayyidah. By her authority he was appointed Dā'y of the Hāshimites,* but he was assassinated by the Amīr al-Mufaḍḍal, son of Abu 'l-Barakāt, son of Abu 'l-Walīd, who caused poison to be administered to him. May God have mercy upon him!

The Lady Sayyidah was born in the year 440 (read 444), and Asmā, daughter of Shihāb, superintended her education. It is related that she one day told Asmā that she had dreamt she held in her hand a broom with which she swept the king's palace. "It is as though I had shared thy vision," exclaimed Asmā. "By Allah! O fair-complexioned, thou shalt sweep away the dynasty of the Sulayhites and thou shalt appropriate their kingdom."

In her personal appearance, Sayyidah was of fair complexion tinged with red, tall, well proportioned, but inclined to stoutness, perfect in beauty, of a clear-sounding voice, well read and a skilful writer, her memory stored with history, with poetry and with the chronology of past times. Nothing could surpass the interlinear glosses, upon both verbal construction and interpretation, inserted in her handwriting on the pages of books. Al-Mukarram married her during the lifetime of his father 'Aly son of Muḥammad the Sulayhite, in the year 461. She bore him four children, Muḥammad, 'Aly, Fāṭimah, and Umm Hamdān. Muḥammad and 'Aly died in childhood at Ṣan'ā. Umm Hamdān was married to Sulṭān Aḥmad ibn Suleymān the Zawāhite, son of her maternal uncle, to whom she bore a son 'Abd al-Musta'la. Fāṭimah, daughter of the Lady Sayyidah and of al-Mukarram, married Shams al-Ma'ālī 'Aly, son of the Dā'y Saba, son of Aḥmad (the Sulayhite). Umm Hamdān died in 516 (or 510?). As for Fāṭimah, her death occurred two years after that of her mother, namely in A.H. 534. I have heard more than one aged man among the natives of Dhu Jiblah affirm that aṣ-Ṣulayḥī treated Sayyidah, in her earliest years, with a degree of deference he showed to no other person. "Show her respect," he used to say to Asmā, for, by Allah, she will be the preserver of our race and the guardian of our crown unto whoso endureth of our dynasty." Much more, my informants added, was heard from him to the same effect and in different places.

The circumstances that led to al-Mukarram's removal from Ṣan'ā to the city of Dhu Jiblah were the following. Upon the death of his mother Asmā, daughter of Shihāb, he made over the superintendence of affairs to his wife, Queen Sayyidah, daughter of Aḥmad. He, on his part, gave himself up to the pleasures of music and wine. The queen remained alone in charge of the affairs of the kingdom. It is said she begged to be accorded her personal freedom, and liberty to attend to the task on which she was engaged, saying that a woman who was desired for the marriage-bed, could not be fit for the business of the state, but he would not consent.

After a time she departed from Ṣan'ā at the head of a large army, and she went forth to behold Dhu Jiblah. Jiblah was the name of a Jew who sold pottery on the spot where the first royal palace was afterwards built, and the city was named after him.³⁶ Its founder was 'Abd Allah, son of Muḥammad the Sulayhite, who was killed at al-Mahjam by Sa'īd al-Aḥwal, together with his brother the Amir and Dā'y 'Aly. The latter had appointed him governor of the fortress of Ta'kar, a stronghold which looks down upon Dhu Jiblah. That city stands below the fortress, between two streams flowing with water both in summer and in winter. It was founded by 'Abd Allah, son of Muḥammad, in the year 458.

The people of Mikhlāf Ja'far gathered together around Sayiddah's stirrup, acknowledging her 30 authority. On her return to Ṣan'ā she said to al-Mukarram: "My lord, send notice to the people of Ṣan'ā to assemble to-morrow and to come unto this plain." On their assembling she told him to cast down his eyes upon the people and to look at what he should see. He did so, and nought met his eyes but the lightning-flashes of drawn swords and of lance-blades. On going to Dhu Jiblah she desired al-Mukarram to assemble its people and those of the neighbourhood. They gathered together on the morning of the following day, whereupon she said: "Look down, my lord, and behold these people." He did so, and his eyes fell upon men leading rams or carrying vessels filled with ghee or with honey. "Life among these (industrious) people," she said to al-Mukarram, "is to be preferred." The Amīr al-Mukarram removed to Dhu Jiblah, and he built the second royal palace upon an uncultivated tract of land. It was surrounded by a garden and by numerous trees, and looked down upon the two streams and upon the first palace. The Queen Sayyidah ordered the latter to be converted into a cathedral mosque. It is the second cathedral mosque. It contains the tomb of the queen, which exists to this day. May God be merciful unto her! The second, the great palace, bearing (like its predecessor) the name of Dār al-'Izz (abode of majesty), was erected in the year 481. Al-Mukarram appointed as his deputies over Ṣan'ā, 'Imran ibn al-Faḍl, of the sub-tribe of Yām and of the tribe of Hamdān, and As'ad ibn Shihāb.

In that year also, the queen encompassed by a stratagem the death of Sa'īd ibn Najāḥ al-Aḥwal. She desired al-Ḥusayn ibn at-Tubba'y, Prince of Sha'ir to write to Sa'īd al-Aḥwal at Zabīd, to represent to him that al-Mukarram was afflicted with paralysis, that he had abandoned himself to the pursuit of pleasure, that the business of his government was conducted by his wife, and that Sa'īd himself was now the most powerful king in Yaman. Further, he suggested, as commanded, a joint attack upon Dhu Jiblah, by Sa'īd from Tihāmah and by al-Ḥusayn himself from the mountains. Sa'īd, he represented, could then relieve himself of his enemy and recover possession of the entire country. "If you approve of my advice," he said, "let it be acted upon. For your rule," he continued, "is better in 31 the eyes of the Muslims than that of these heretics." When Sa'īd ibn Najāh read the letter of Ḥusayn ibn at-Tubba'y, he greatly approved of what was proposed, and he was filled with gladness. On the day appointed by at-Tubba'y, he set forth from Zabīd for Dhu Jiblah at the head of thirty thousand spearmen. The Queen Sayyidah had meanwhile sent orders to As'ad ibn Shihāb, and to 'Imran ibn al-Fadl at San'ā, desiring them to march into Tihāmah in the rear of Najāh, with three thousand horsemen, and to follow him stage by stage. They obeyed, and upon Sa'īd ibn Najāh halting below the fortress of ash-Sha'ir, the two armies fell upon him from either side. He and all his followers were put to the sword, but it is also said that two thousand escaped. His head was put up below the window of the palace Dār al-'Izz, inhabited by the Queen Sayyidah. His wife Umm al-Mu'ārik was with him, and it was by her means that his head was recognized among the slain. It was set up close to the window of the apartment that was assigned to her. "O that thou hadst eyes, Lady Asnā," exclaimed the Queen, "wherewith to see the head of the squint-eyed slave below the window of Umm al-Mu'ārik!"

Al-Mukarram, son of 'Aly, died in A.H. 484, bequeathing the office of Dā'y to the Most Noble Amīr, the Unparagoned, the Victorious, the Pillar of the Khalifate, Prince of Amīrs, al-Manṣur Abu Ḥimyar Saba, son of Aḥmad al-Muẓaffar, son of 'Aly the Sulayhite.³⁷

HISTORY OF THE DĀ'Y SABA, SON OF AHMAD, SON OF AL-MUZAFFAR, SON OF 'ALY THE SULAYHITE.

IN his external appearance, the Dā'y Saba was ill-favoured [and short in stature], nor did he appear to advantage in the saddle. But he was of a benevolent and generous disposition, an accomplished poet, learned in the doctrines of the Pure Sect, well
32 acquainted with the sayings of the wise, nurtured on poetry. He requited eulogists with eulogy, as well as with substantial rewards. On that point 'Aly ibn al-Ḳumm has said of him:—

When I panegyricized al-Hayzari,* the son of Aḥmad—he rewarded me and he requited me with praise for my praise.

He gave me verses for my verses, and added—gifts, those my capital in trade, these my profits.

I forced my way through the crowd until I beheld him—as one that hath pierced through darkness unto morning's light.

An evil time it were, deprived of the son of Aḥmad!—but assuredly free from evil is the age in which he liveth!³⁸

His residence was a stronghold called Ashyah, a lofty castle equal in stateliness and strength to Masār and Ta'kar. It has been related to me by the Ḳur'ān reader, Suleymān ibn Yā-Sīn, who was a Ḥanafite, that he once spent several nights in the fortress of Ashyah. In the morning, he said, he could see the sun rising in the east, but shedding no light (upon the country). Turning towards Tihāmah, so much lingering darkness still prevailed as to prevent the wayfarer from recognizing a companion walking close beside him. Ibn Yā-Sīn supposed this to be caused by clouds or mists, but he eventually determined it to be the result of a protraction of the darkness of night. He vowed, in consequence, always to reckon the hour for the performance of morning prayer according to the rules of the Shāfy'ites ; for the followers of Abu Hanīfah postpone the hour until the sun has almost risen over the low-lying plains of Tihāmah. The actual fact is simply that the eastern aspect from 33 Ashyah is unimpeded by mountains, in consequence of its own situation on a lofty summit.

The fortresses of the Banu Muẓaffar overlooked the plain of Tihāmah. They bordered closely upon the territories of Zabīd ; and of all the mountains, those upon which these fortresses stand, are the nearest to Tihāmah. Among other strongholds in the possession of the family were Maḳr, Wuṣāb, Kawarīr, az-Zarf, and ash-Sharaf. The last mentioned is the place where Ibn Mahdi rose in insurrection. The remaining places were Dhu 'r-Rassah, Zafār (Zafirān ?), and Raymah, with its districts.* As his territories adjoined Tihāmah, Saba used to make Jayyāsh taste the vicissitudes of war. His Arabs, on perceiving the approach of winter, were in the habit of descending into the low country. Jayyāsh would thereupon retire, but to no great distance, and Saba would collect the revenues. He was careful, nevertheless, not to act oppressively towards the inhabitants, and on the contrary, in reckoning with the collectors, he made allowance for the sums raised by Jayyāsh during the summer and autumn months. When winter and spring passed away, the Arabs withdrew from Tihāmah to the mountains, and Jayyāsh re-entered into possession. The withdrawal of the Arabs was sometimes attended with fighting, and sometimes it was peaceful.

On the return of Jayyāsh to Zabīd, the Ḳur'āns were spread open, his subjects joined in supplications for his prosperity, the Jurists came forth, and the 'Ulama (the doctors of the law) offered up prayers for the prolongation of his reign. In reckoning with the governors and collectors, Jayyāsh likewise allowed for the sums levied by Saba during the months of winter and spring.

That situation continued until the wazīr Khalf ibn Abi Ṭāhir advised the son of Jayyāsh to imprison his father, to seize his treasure and property . . . and to appoint Muḥammad ibn al Ghifāri his wazīr. This was carried into execution. After a time, Khalf pierced an opening through the walls of his prison, and took refuge with Saba, by whom he was well received. He ceased not to urge upon Saba the invasion of Tihāmah, and indicated to him means and artifices whereby he could reduce Jayyāsh to utter ruin . . . to Saba a stated sum to stand in lieu of the half, and that he should stipulate with Saba for the banishment of the wazīr Khalf from his court. Jayyāsh followed the advice of the wazīr, but thereupon the greed with which the Arabs coveted the country increased, and they reckoned themselves to be secure . . . The Kā'id Rayḥān al-Kahlani, freedman of Sa'id, son of Najāh,³⁴ at the head of ten thousand men, surprised the Arabs by night near the gate of Zabīd, where they were arrayed to the number of three thousand horse and ten thousand foot. Only a small remnant escaped. Nearly all were speared, and Saba fled on foot among a mixed and disorderly body of fugitives. Towards the end of the night a party met and rescued him. The Arabs did not thereafter return to Tihāmah.³⁹

Among other passages in the life of the Dā'y Saba, son of Aḥmad, is that related to me by the Jurist Abu 'Abd Allah al-Ḥusayn ibn 'Aly al-Bajali,* who had learned it from his father. The latter resided at Dhu Jiblah, and was one of the retainers of the Dā'y. When, he said, al-Mukarram son of 'Aly died, leaving the Queen Sayyidah daughter of

* That is to say, member of the tribe of Bajilah.

Aḥmad a widow, the Dā'y Saba asked her in marriage. She refused, whereupon he collected troops and marched from Ashyah, purposing to attack her at Dhu Jiblah. She likewise assembled a host, more numerous than his. The two armies met and the fire of war was kindled and raged for several days. The queen's half-brother, Suleymān ibn 'Āmir az-Zawāḥi, son of her mother, then said to Saba: "By Allah! she will not agree to that which thou desirest excepting by command of the Imām al-Mustanṣir billāh, Prince of the Faithful." The Dā'y Saba ibn Aḥmad al-Auḥad (the Unparagoned) al-Manṣūr desisted from fighting against her troops and returned to Ashyah. He despatched to the Imām al-Mustanṣir two messengers, the Kādi (Abu 'Abd Allah al-) Ḥusayn ibn Isma'il al-Isfahāni and Abu 'Abd Allah aṭ-Ṭayyib. In the course of the correspondence the Khalifah wrote to the Lady three lines, commanding her to wed the Dā'y Saba, and he sent her also one of his own eunuchs, known under the designation of Hamil al-Madyah, who bore moreover the honorific surname of Yaman ad-Da'wah (right hand of the Ismailite Mission), empowered to enter into the presence of the queen. Al-Jabali (Bajaly) relates that he was one of the persons sent by the Dā'y Saba from the castle of Ashyah to Dhu Jiblah to accompany the two envoys and the eunuch who had arrived from Cairo the Mu'izzite. Upon their entering into the presence of Queen Sayyidah, daughter of Aḥmad, in the palace, the Dār al-'Izz at Dhu Jiblah, the eunuch, surrounded, said the narrator, by her ministers, her secretaries, and the officials of the state, all standing up as he stood, addressed her in the following words: "The Prince of the Faithful 35 returneth salutations of peace unto the Honourable Lady, the Queen Sayyidah, the Favoured, the Pure, the Unparagoned of her time, Sovereign Lady of the Kings of Yaman, the Pillar of Islam, the Treasure of the Faith, Refuge of the truly directed, Asylum of those who seek aid, the Friend of the Prince of the Faithful, the Guardian of his favoured servants, and he saith unto her: *Unto no believer, male nor female, belongeth liberty of choice when God and His apostle have decreed a command, and whosoever opposeth God and His apostle wandereth signally astray.*⁴⁰ Our lord, the Prince of the Faithful, gives thee in marriage to the Dā'y, the Unparagoned, the Victorious, the Triumphant, the Pillar of the Khalīfate, the Prince of the Amīrs, Abu Himyar Saba, son of Aḥmad, son of al-Muzaffar 'Alī the Sulayhite, with the dowry he has provided, of one hundred thousand dinārs in money, and fifty thousand dinārs in articles of rarity and value, in perfumes and in robes." Sayiddah answered: "As for the letter of our lord, I say of it: *Verily a gracious letter hath been conveyed unto me. It is from Solomon, and behold it saith: In the name of God, the Merciful, the Gracious. Resist me not but come unto me with submission. I say not touching the command of our lord, O ye counsellors advise me, and nought will I determine until ye shall have spoken.*⁴¹ But as for thee, O Ibn al Isfahāni, by Allah! thou hast not carried unto our lord from Saba a sure and truthful message. Ye have wrested the words from their true sense and your souls have prompted you to commit an act of wickedness. My recourse is now to the comely virtue of patience, and God is He whose help is to be implored against the evil ye have set forth." * The queen's wazīr Zuray' ibn Abi 'l-Faḥ al-Isfahāni and others of her chief officers advanced, and ceased not to speak to her in pacifying terms until she gave her consent. A marriage contract was drawn up, and Saba hastened to Dhu Jiblah, accompanied by a large retinue.

* Kur. xii. s. 18.

He remained for a month, during which his camp was the scene of profuse feasting, and he expended upon his soldiery a sum equal to the dowry he paid to the Princess. But the contemplation of her lofty aims, and of her noble deeds, caused the Dā'y Saba ibn Aḥmad to feel humbled in his own estimation. He perceived that his reputation was dimmed, and that no person could be fitly compared 36 with her. All her people were in the habit of saying that their Lady was their Mistress.

The Dā'y Saba secretly sent a message to the queen, requesting her to receive him in her palace, that it might be believed by the people that the marriage had been consummated, to which she consented. Some of the inhabitants of Dhu Jiblah assert that she received him in her own apartments for one night, and that in the early morning he departed. Others say that she sent him one of her female slaves who bore an exceeding resemblance to herself, that he received warning thereof, and that the girl remained standing throughout the night at the head of his couch, whilst he sat without ever raising his eyes upon her, until when day dawned, he performed his morning devotions and ordered the drums to be beat for departure. He then said to the slave girl: "Tell our lady that she is a precious pearl, to be worn only by whoever is worthy of her." He then departed, and they did not meet again.⁴²

It is reported of the Da'y Saba that he never had intercourse with a slave girl, and that he never tasted intoxicating beverages. His wife al-Jumānah, daughter of Suwayd, son of Yazīd the Sulayhite, was in the habit of saying that she was undisturbed by jealousy on account of her Lord Saba, seeing that he abstained from all intercourse with concubines, and it was a common saying among the Arab women that none among the posterity of Eve had been so privileged as al-Jumānah, with the exception only of Asmā, daughter of Shihāb.

At this period Shujā' ad-Daulah arrived in Yaman. He was enriched by the gifts bestowed upon him, and Shams al-Ma'āli (son of Saba and husband of Fāṭimah daughter of al-Mukarram and of the Queen Sayyidah), who was of a most generous disposition, gave him sums of money amounting to thousands. After a time Shams al-Ma'āli took a second wife and Fāṭimah wrote to her mother imploring her aid. The Princess sent troops to her assistance, under the command of al-Faḍl (al-Mufaḍḍal), son of Abu 'l-Barakāt. Fāṭimah, having put on the garb of a man, escaped from her husband's castle to the camp of al-Mufaḍḍal, who sent her on to her mother. He continued to besiege the Prince until an arrangement was arrived at, whereby Shams al-Ma'āli was banished from his kingdom, under a safe conduct against all personal harm. He reached the court of al-Afdal (at Cairo), and implored his assistance, but al-Afdal paid no regard to his request and showed him no hospitality.⁴³ The Amīr Shujā' ad-Daulah, whom Shams al-Ma'āli had enriched in Yaman, sent him thirty ardebs of barley, but did not supply him with a morsel of bread, nor did he admit him into his society. 'Aly Shams al-Ma'āli son of Saba returned to Yaman, and gained possession of his father's fortresses, but the Amīr al-Mufaḍḍal employed a person who poisoned him in the year 495.

THE STORY OF THE KING AL-MUFAḌḌAL, SON OF ABU 'L-BARAKĀT SON OF AL-WALĪD, THE HIM-YARITE, PRINCE OF TA'KAR.

WHEN al-Mukarram, son of 'Aly, built the palace of Dār al-'Izz at Dhu Jiblah, and removed from San'ā to the Province of Ja'far, 'Abd Allah ibn Ya'la composed the following lines:—

The gentle zephyr blew, and I spent the night as one distracted,— yearning after family and friends.

Not Cairo, nor Baghdad, neither can Tiberius—be compared to the city enclosed between two streams.

Khalid commands the north, Ḥabb overlooks the east—and to Ta'kar the lofty, belong the southern climes of Yaman.

At-Ta'kar was at that time in the hands of Sultān As'ad son of 'Abd Allah son of Muḥammad the Sulayhite, son, therefore, of the paternal uncle of the King al-Mukarram, the same 'Abd Allah who was killed at al-Maḥjam, along with his brother the Dā'y Aly son of Muḥammad. His conduct became bad, and al-Mukarram removed him from Ta'kar, giving him in exchange the fortresses of Raymah. [He placed Abu 'l-Barakāt, son of al-Walīd, in command over Ta'kar and its dependencies, and he appointed] Abu 'l-Barakāt's brother Abu 'l-Faṭḥ (read Futūḥ) son of al-Walīd, over the fortress of Ta'izz.⁴⁴ Al-Mufaḍḍal entered the service of the King al-Mukarram at Dhu Jiblah. He was one of the young pages of the palace, admitted into the presence of the Honourable Lady the Queen with messages from al-Mukarram, touching matters of business between them. Upon the death of the Amīr al-Mufaḍḍal's father Abu 'l-Barakāt, which followed that of the King al-Mukarram, the Queen appointed al-Mufaḍḍal successor to his father in the governorship of Ta'kar. That fortress was used by the Sulayhites as a depository for the treasures they had won from the kings of Yaman. The 38 Queen was in the habit of going up thither, and making it her place of residence during the summer, returning to Dhu Jiblah for the cold season. Al-Mufaḍḍal exercised the powers which the Princess delegated to him and had access unto her, along with her chief wazīrs, with the Amīrs and with her principal slaves. He was supreme administrator of affairs. In all things reliance was placed upon his judgment and upon his sword. The Queen came to no decision without his advice. He rose, consequently, to a state of great dignity, and his words were listened to with respect. He invaded Tihāmah on several occasions, with results sometimes in his favour and at others against him. He also several times made war upon Aden, and ere long no personage in Yaman could rival him in power. Having attained this exalted position, he one day said to the Queen at Ta'kar: "Consider, my lady, the treasures that are contained in this castle. Carry them away, I pray you, to the Dār al-'Izz, or remove them to some other palace, and leave this place (meaning thereby Ta'kar) entirely to me, renouncing henceforward your authority over it." "Hadst thou not spoken these words," she replied, "I would not have allowed any cause for their utterance to exist. The castle is thine. Thou art the confidential minister in my palace, and I have forbidden thee nothing in the past, in consideration of thine exalted condition." He was filled with confusion, and hung his head. The Queen went down to Dhu Jiblah, but made no change in her conduct towards al-Mufaddal. He used to go down to her and entreat her to return to Ta'kar, as she had been in the habit of doing, but she never consented. She nevertheless applied herself to conciliate his good will by presents such as were most agreeable to him, of singing girls, valuable stuffs and perfumes, slaves, eunuchs, and other gifts. She would not listen to those who blamed her on his account, or who cautioned her against him. And his fame is connected with memorable battlefields, in which he defended her, and protected her territories. He fought against the Dā'y Saba ibn Aḥmad when the latter asked her in marriage. She refused, and al-Mufaḍḍal marched against Saba with a large army. He fought also against 'Aly ibn Saba (Shams al-Ma'ālī), Prince of Kayḍān (Kayzān),⁴⁵ and expelled him from his province, and against 'Amru ibn Karmāṭah (read 'Arkāṭah) al-Janbī, and against others of the tribes of Sinḥān, of 'Ans, and of Zubayd. He recovered for her also, from the Banu Zuray', one half of the revenues of Aden, 39 [which amounted to] one hundred thousand dinārs a year.

Sheykh Abu Ṭāhir al-Ḳābuni has related to me that he was on one occasion with al-Mufaḍḍal ibn Abi 'l-Barakāt, at at-Ta'kar, when half the revenues of Aden, fifty thousand dinārs, reached him. He immediately sent the money to the Queen at Dhu Jiblah, without retaining any portion of it. Sheykh Abu Ṭāhir disapproved of such scrupulous conduct, but al-Mufaḍḍal replied that he required nothing besides what the Queen gave him. When the money reached her she returned it, desiring him to retain it, "for," she said, "you have more need of it than we." Al-Mufaḍḍal, said Abu Ṭāhir, divided among the people present ten bags, and he gave me one containing one thousand dinārs.

Al-Mufaḍḍal was in the habit of secluding himself until people despaired of again seeing him. Then he would re-appear. The messengers who had gathered around his gates had to wait, whilst both weak and powerful (claimants) were admitted. He examined into the affairs of the governors and of their provinces, and answered every letter that had reached his gates. He would then again disappear, and could neither be seen, nor could any message be transmitted to him. Such was his custom from the time when he attained his exalted position.

When al-Manṣūr, son of [Fātik son of] Jayyāsh, was driven forth from Zabīd, and replaced by his brother (read uncle) 'Abd al-Wāḥid son of Jayyāsh, he fled with his slaves to Mufaḍḍal, and they pledged themselves to deliver unto him one fourth of the country in return for his assistance. Al-Mufaḍḍal marched with them against their enemies, expelled 'Abd al-Wāḥid from the city, and reinstated al-Manṣūr and his followers. He then, however, conceived treacherous designs against them, and purposed making himself master of Zabīd.

But al-Mufaḍḍal's absence in Tihāmah had prolonged itself, and Ta'kar, deserted by the Prince, was committed to the charge of a deputy, known by the name of al-Ḥamal. This man was held in great respect, and was strongly attached to the (orthodox) faith. Seven jurists, brethren of al-Ḥamal, went up to him at Ta'kar. Among them were Muḥammad ibn Ḳabas (Ḳays?) the Wuhāzīte, 'Abd Allāh ibn Yahya and Ibrahīm ibn Muḥammad Zeydān. The latter was their acknowledged leader, and he was my uncle, the full brother of my father by both parents.⁴⁶ They received possession of the fortress from al-Ḥamal. The Sunni subjects of the Sulayhites had desired the jurists, on their gaining possession of the fortress, to kindle a fire on the summit. They did so during the darkness of night. In the morning twenty thousand men assembled at the gates of the castle in support of the jurists, who became possessed of an amount of wealth such as had never before been seen. The news reached the Amīr 40 al-Mufaḍḍal in Tihāmah. He set out and turned neither to the right nor to the left till he reached Ta'kar. He besieged the jurists, but the Banu Khaulān rose to their assistance. The siege, however, continued, and ere long the garrison perceived that the Khaulānites were prepared to abandon them. Thereupon Ibrahīm ibn Zeydān declared to his companions that he was determined not to die until he had slain al-Mufaḍḍal, after which, death, he said, would be welcome. He seized the concubines of al-Mufaḍḍal, and brought them forth wearing their most magnificent apparel. Placing tabours in their hands, he set them upon the roof of the palace, whence al-Mufaḍḍal, who was in a tent at 'Azzān at Ta'kar, and all that were with him, could see and hear them. Al-Mufaḍḍal was the most jealous and sensitive of men, and it is said that he died that night. By some it is stated that he sucked the poison from a ring he wore, prepared for a case of need, and that he was found dead in the morning with the ring in his mouth. His death occurred in the month of Ramaḍān of the year 504.

The Queen thereupon ascended from Dhu Jiblah, and encamped on the open ground, near the gate of the fortress. She wrote to the jurists, and adopted with them the most conciliatory measures, even to giving them a bond under her own hand, granting them all their demands, their personal safety, and retention of the treasure they had seized. They stipulated that she should depart with her forces, that she should send them, as governor, a person whose appointment should be subject to their approval, and that they should remain with him (in occupation of the fortress) until their booty should be in a place of safety. The Queen faithfully observed the conditions agreed upon, and she appointed over Ta'kar her freedman Faḥḥ ibn Miḥṭāh. I have been told by Sulṭān Nāṣir ibn Maṣṣūr, that my uncle Ibrahīm ibn Zeydān informed him, after his withdrawal from Ta'kar, that his share of ready money amounted to twenty thousand dinārs.

Part of the tribe of Khaulān had entered and settled in Mikhlāf Ja'far before the death of al-Mufaḍḍal, to the number of six thousand souls, a mixed multitude consisting chiefly of Banu Baḥr, Banu Dinnah, Marrān, Rawāḥ (Rāziḥ?), Sha'b-Hay, and Banu Jumā'ah.⁴⁷ Al-Mufaḍḍal dispersed them among the strongholds of the country and made them take the oath of allegiance to the Queen. Upon the death of al-Mufaḍḍal, a man of the sub-tribe of Marrān, of the name of Muslim ibn az-Zarr, 41 attacked the fortress of Khadid, drove therefrom the Sultān ‘Abd Allah ibn Ya‘la the Sulayhite, the accomplished poet and learned scholar, and took possession of the stronghold. ‘Abd Allah ibn Ya‘la was possessed of great wealth, which passed into the hands of Muslim ibn az-Zarr, whose power was thereby greatly increased. He joined the Queen and her adherents, and formed hopes that she would appoint him to succeed al-Mufaḍḍal, son of Abu ‘l-Barakāt.⁴⁸ He sent her his two sons, ‘Imrān and Suleymān, whom she received with kindness and by her command, although they had reached the years of maturity, they were taught to read and write. Afterwards she married them to two of her slaves brought up under her care. They visited their father by turns, at Khadid, and they were protected by the tribe of Khaulān, which possessed great power and influence. Upon the death of Muslim, his son Suleymān succeeded to the fortress of Khadid. ‘Imrān remained with the Queen and acquired favour with her. Faṭḥ ibn Miṭṭaḥ had, after the death of Muslim, entered into a state of opposition to the Queen his mistress, and had declared himself independent at the fortress of Ta‘kar. ‘Imrān made friendly advances to Faṭḥ, and after his rebellion, asked his daughter in marriage. On the night of the wedding Suleymān and ‘Imrān gained possession, by treachery, of the castle of Ta‘kar, but ‘Imrān protected his father-in-law from personal harm. Faṭḥ stipulated with the two brothers for certain things, which they granted. One was that they should give him, as a free gift, a certain castle called Shār.* Thither he removed all that he held most valuable. On obtaining possession of the fortress of Ta'kar, 'Imrān sent the Honourable Lady the Queen repeated assurances of loyalty and homage, of which she took no heed. The Khaulānites stretched forth their hands against the people, whom they oppressed and plundered. The night on which they gained possession of Ta'kar was that of Sunday, the twelfth day of Rabi' al-Awwal of the year 505.

Such continued to be the condition of things between the Banu Khaulān and the Queen. When she saw their exceeding wickedness, she sent a letter to 'Amru ibn 'Arḩaṩah al-Janbi (of the tribe of Janb), consisting of one or two lines in her handwriting. She ordered the country of Suleymān and 'Imrān to be occupied by an army of horse and foot, and they were not to be relieved of its presence, until they 42 humbled themselves unto her and made a request for its withdrawal. Sulṩān Yazīd ibn 'Īsa the Wā'ilite told me that he remembered being sent to the Queen by 'Imrān ibn az-Zarr, then facing the Arabs of 'Amru in order of battle. 'Imrān asked her assistance, and she sent him ten thousand dinārs to serve for the purchase of supplies. But the money was returned. "Does she not know," exclaimed 'Imrān, "what it is that can be of real service to me?" She thereupon wrote an order with her own hand, added Yazīd ibn 'Īsa, to 'Amru ibn 'Arfaṩah al-Jabani ('Arḩaṩah al-Janbi) in the following terms: "On receiving this our command, depart from the country of the Banu Zarr, with our thanks for your services." On reading the order 'Amru immediately directed the signal for departure to be proclaimed to his people. It consisted in the utterance of the words O Rāshid, son of Marūh.⁴⁹ Before an hour had elapsed, not one of his people remained in the place. "This, by the Lord," said 'Imrān to his brother, "is truly (a receiving of) honour and obedience!"

THE HISTORY OF IBN NAJĪB AD-DAULAH.

IN the year 513 Ibn Najīb ad-Daulah came to Yaman, and the following is the history of al-Muwaffaq Ibn Najīb ad-Daulah :—

At the commencement of his career, he was custodian of the library of al-Afdal (Shahinshah, at Cairo). He had a well-stored memory, had studied the doctrines of the Pure Sect (the Ismailites), was constant in recitations of the noble Qur'an, and recited it according to its various readings. His name was 'Aly, son of Ibrahīm, son of Najīb ad-Daulah, and his titles were al-Amīr al-Muntakhab (the Chosen Amir), Glory of the Fatimite Khalifate, Fakhr ad-Daulah (Lustre of the State), al-Muwaffaq fi-'d-dīn (Aided in the Faith), Dā'y of the Prince of the Faithful. He started from Cairo accompanied by twenty mounted men, carefully chosen from among the Hujarīyahs.⁵⁰ On arriving at the Island of Dahlak, he was met by an emissary (?) from Aden, Muḥammad ibn Abi 'l-'Arab the Dā'y, one of the sons of Ṣā'id ibn Ḥamīd ad-Dīn. This man instructed him in the secret politics of Yaman, the condition of the chiefs, their names, their personal appearance and their surnames, even the dates of 43 their births and particulars of marks, traces of wounds and cauterizations, concealed by their clothing. When Ibn Najīb ad-Daulah (afterwards spoke of those things and) put questions touching their occult significations, his hearers became convinced that he possessed knowledge of the invisible world.⁵¹ The first thing he did on arrival at Dhu Jiblah was to lay hold of a Khaulānite of the name of Suleymān ibn 'Obayd, belonging to (the sub-tribe or family of) the Banu 'Amru and a kinsman of 'Imrān ibn az-Zarr. He was a man widely known and held in great respect. Ibn Najīb ad-Daulah beat him with a stick until it caught in his clothes. The Banu Khaulān withdrew from Dhu Jiblah. Suleymān ibn Aḥmad (read Aḥmad ibn Suleymān) the Zawāhite, son of the Queen's (half) brother and husband of Umm Hamdān daughter of al-Mukarram, hurried to the spot and released the Khaulānite from the hands of Ibn Najīb ad-Daulah without seeking the latter's consent. He gave the man a dress of honour and sent him back to his family. Thenceforward the Khaulānites restrained themselves from stretching forth their hands against the people.

Ibn Najīb ad-Daulah then proceeded to make war upon the inhabitants of Wādī Maytam,⁵² of (Wādī) Zabīd and of the plains. Good order, together with cheapness and plenty, became prevalent throughout the country and evil-doers were repressed. He himself respected the property of its inhabitants, he dealt righteously with them and maintained the laws. Through him the Queen's fame was enhanced, and the neighbouring nations of Yaman found themselves constrained to desist from coveting the outlying provinces of her dominions. He took into his service three hundred horsemen of the Banu Ḥimās and Sinḥān, and appointed aṭ-Tauḵ the Hamdānite to command them. When al-ʿAfdal (Shahinshah) died in the year 515, al-Ma'mūn (al-Baṭā'ihī) confirmed the authority of Ibn Najīb ad-Daulah. He strengthened him and sent him letters delegating to him the fullest powers over the people. Al-Ma'mūn sent him four hundred Armenians and seven hundred black archers. Ibn Najīb ad-Daulah established his residence at Janad, which stands in the centre of the country, and whose districts have unceasingly been trampled under the hoofs of armed men's horses.

But the authority he exercised was impatiently endured by the kings of the time, namely, Suleymān and 'Imrān, the two sons of az-Zarr, Manṣūr son of al-Mufaḍḍal ibn Abi 'l-Barakāt, Saba ibn Abi Su'ūd, and Mufaḍḍal ibn Zuray'. In the year 518 Ibn Najīb ad-Daulah attacked Zabīd, which was then ruled by the wazīr Mann Allah the Fatikite.

44 Ten of his archers had allied themselves with the citizens, and as the two armies entered into action, one of the archers shot an arrow which struck the muzzle of the horse upon which 'Aly ibn Ibrahīm Najīb ad-Daulah was mounted. He fell to the ground and lost his horse. His army was put to flight, all his black troops were killed, and only fifty out of four hundred Armenians escaped. As to the Dā'y (Ibn Najīb ad-Daulah), the Hamdānites fought strenuously in his defence, until one of them, a man of the name of As-Sā'y, took him up and seated him upon his horse behind him. The Hamdānite horsemen who exerted themselves to save him were fifteen in number, and the chief, aṭ-Tauḵ, was one of them. Ibn Najīb ad-Daulah's horse disappeared from the battle at the hour of mid-day prayer on Friday. Early on the Saturday morning he appeared in the city of Janad, situated at a distance of four days' journey from Zabīd, or of three days' at a forced pace. Before evening a report was spread at Dhu Jiblah that Ibn Najīb ad-Daulah had been killed at Zabīd. He reached Janad four days after and rode to Dhu Jiblah, where he conferred with the Queen.

He suffered in health, but recovered, and for four months he carried on war in the country of Suleymān ibn az-Zarr. A truce was concluded between them and he returned to Janad. Next he made war upon the family of Zuray' and penetrated to al-Juwwah. He was attacked at Hima Bani Salmah (?) by al-Mufaḍḍal ibn Zuray'. Ibn Najīb ad-Daulah received a lance-thrust and being a bad horseman he fell to the ground. He was attacked by a slave belonging to Mas'ūd (al-Mufaḍḍal ?) ibn Zuray' named Musāfir, but the slave was charged and killed by Ṭauḵ the Hamdānite, who stood by Ibn Najīb ad-Daulah until he remounted, whereupon the Dā'y returned to Janad. He lost his breast-plate, which fell to the ground during the struggle, and Mufaḍḍal ibn Zuray' composed the following lines upon the occasion :—

He fled forgetting his breast-plate—In terror of the Banu Yām, lest their lances should pierce him.

But flight saveth not from death—a truth held by every steadfast and believing soul.⁵³

In the year 519 his conduct towards the Queen
45 assumed an evil aspect. Her mind, he said, had become weakened, and he asserted that in his opinion it was necessary to place her in seclusion. But, meanwhile, she was joined by the four (six ?) kings, Suleymān and 'Imrān, sons of az-Zarr, Saba son of Abu Su'ūd, Abu 'l-Gharāt (son of Mas'ūd), As'ad ibn Abi 'l-Futūḥ and Maṣṣūr ibn al-Mufaḍḍal. They asked her permission to besiege Ibn Najīb ad-Daulah at Janad, which she granted. The city was defended by walls, and Ibn Najīb ad-Daulah had a force, part of the garrison, consisting of four hundred picked horsemen belonging to the tribe of Hamdān. The kings arrived with an army, consisting of three thousand horse and three thousand foot soldiers, with which they surrounded the city. Ibn Najīb ad-Daulah had with him certain men, each of whom was equal to one hundred horsemen. Among them were at-Ṭauḵ ibn 'Abd Allah, Muḥammad ibn Aḥmad ibn 'Imrān ibn al-Faḍl ibn 'Aly the Yāmīte, 'Abd Allah ibn 'Abd Allah, who exercised the functions of Dā'y after Ibn Najīb ad-Daulah and who was a member of the family of Sulayḥi, also 'Aly son of Suleymān az-Zawāhi, Abu 'l-Ghayth ibn Sāmīr, Muḥammad ibn al-A'azz, who lived until he was treacherously slain by Ibn Mahdi, and al-Faridayn (?). The siege was carried on with vigour, and Ibn Najīb ad-Daulah was put to great straits. The Queen, thereupon wrote, according to her custom, to ‘Amru ibn ‘Arḩaḩah al-Janbi, who came to her and encamped at Dhu Jiblah. She sent also to the chiefs of the tribes and distributed among them ten thousand Egyptian dinārs, desiring her messengers at the same time to spread a report among the soldiers, to the effect that Ibn Najīb ad-Daulah had distributed a sum of ten thousand Egyptian dinārs among their leaders. The soldiers thereupon demanded that a share of the Egyptian gold be granted to them, else they would depart. The kings made promises, but when night closed in they started each for his own country. Next morning the troops found themselves without leaders. They broke up their encampment and abandoned the siege.* “Perceivest thou,” it was said to Ibn Najīb ad-Daulah, “the artifice accomplished by her of whom thou hast said that her mind is weakened?” He rode to Dhu Jiblah and strove to justify and to excuse himself to the Princess.

The Queen was the accepted representative of the Imām, upon whom be peace. . . .

The cause of this arrest⁵⁴ of Ibn Najīb ad-Daulah was [as follows according to what was related by] the jurist Abu ‘Abd Allah al-Husayn ibn ‘Aly al-Ḩalaby (al-Bajaly). Al-Ma‘mūn (al-Baḩā‘ihy), when wazīr (in Egypt), sent an envoy to Yaman, entrusted with military power, known by the name of al-Amīr al-Kadhḩāb. On his reaching Dhu Jiblah, he was present at a crowded assembly held by Ibn Najīb ad-Daulah. The latter did not welcome him and he neither treated him as a guest, nor did he notice him. He sought to humiliate him and asked him whether he was not superintendent of the city police at Cairo. "Yea, and indeed," answered the envoy, "they whom I smite with my hand, are amongst the most eminent of those who boast of a rabble following of ten thousand men." Ibn Najīb ad-Daulah was himself humiliated by the reply he received, and his enemies thenceforward attached themselves to the envoy. They extolled his merits. He, on his part, plied them with presents and promised them the destruction of 'Aly ibn Ibrāhīm (ibn Najīb ad-Daulah) by means of two expedients. He recommended them in the first place to give him letters for the Khalīfah al-Āmir, stating that Ibn Najīb ad-Daulah had invited and called upon them to recognize Nizār as supreme Imām and that they had refused. In the second place, they were to strike coins in the name of Nizār, which the envoy promised to transmit to our lord al-Āmir bi-Aḥkām Illah. They followed his advice, and his return to Cairo occurred simultaneously with the arrest and imprisonment of the wazīr al-Ma'mūn. The envoy sent the letters and the coins to the Khalīfah, who commanded the Amīr al-Muwaffaq ibn al-Khayyāt to be sent to Yaman, for the arrest of Ibn Najīb ad-Daulah.⁵⁵ He started from the Imperial Gate, accompanied by a hundred men belonging to the military body, the Hujarīyahs, all men fitted for the most arduous enterprises. Among the companions of Ibn al-Khayyāt were 'Izz id-dīn and his own son Sa'd al-Mulk. On hearing of the envoy's arrival at Dahlak, Ibn Najīb ad-Daulah set forth for the country of Zabīd, notwithstanding the objections and repugnance he felt to doing so. A Dā'y, he said, must not skulk away in hiding. Death, he added, was preferable to disgrace. His enemies addressed themselves to the Queen and warned her to secure his person, for, they urged, the Imām would hold her alone responsible for his safe keeping. The Queen feigned to be ill and sent to Ibn Najīb ad-Daulah 47 the Sharīf As‘ad ibn ‘Abd aṣ-Samad ibn Muḥammad al-Ḥawwāly. This man was his most faithful friend. He overtook Ibn Najīb ad-Daulah at the distance of a night’s journey from Janad and told him that the Queen, the chosen representative of the Prince of the Faithful, was on the point of death.—“She places confidence in thee alone,” he added, and urged him to return to her. He did so, and she ordered him to be arrested, but she treated him with lenity and fettered him with silver chains weighing fifty ounces. The envoy arrived from Aden and demanded the surrender of Ibn Najīb ad-Daulah. The Queen refused. “Thou art the bearer of a letter from our lord,” she replied. “Take charge of my answer, or if thou preferrest, I will write to the Prince of the Faithful, and wait thou here until I receive his reply.” But the two kings Suleymān and ‘Imrān, the sons of az-Zarr, interfered. The Queen confided greatly in the judgment of ‘Abd Allah ibn al-Mahdi al-Ma‘mari. They offered him ten thousand dinārs, besides two castles in her dominions. He alarmed the Queen with representations of the evil consequences of rumours connecting her with the Nizārites, and directed the envoy and his companions to spread reports on the subject. The Queen yielded, but allayed the fears she entertained of the envoy, on Najīb ad-Daulah’s account, by exacting many solemn oaths from Ibn al-Khayyāṭ. She wrote also to our lord al-Āmir bi-Aḥkam Illah, the Prince of the Faithful, interceding with the Khalīfah for Ibn Najīb ad-Daulah, and she sent unto him her secretary, Muḥammad ibn al-Azraḳi, a man of culture, the draftsman of the council, an elegant writer, eloquent, and remarkable for his benevolence. Among the presents she sent was a suit of armour, enriched with jewels of the value of forty thousand dinārs. Ibn Najib ad-Daulah was carried forth from Dhu Jiblah in a wooden cage. The people looked on, and he said unto them: "That which ye look upon is a lion imprisoned in a cage."

* This, according to al-Khaḩraji, occurred in Muḩarram, A.H. 520.

On reaching the distance of a night's journey from Dhu Jiblah, his custodians attached an iron weight of one hundred pounds to his feet and they reviled him and humiliated him. He was made to sleep naked in the vestibule, although it was winter. They hurried him away from Aden in a ship belonging to the port of Sawākin. They detained the Queen's messenger, Ibn al-Azraḳi, for five days.
 48 Then they sent him off and they ordered the captain to wreck the ship. The vessel was sunk with all she contained, near Bāb al-Mandeb, and Ibn al-Azraḳi was drowned.

The Queen was greatly afflicted, when regrets could no longer avail.⁵⁶ Suleyman and 'Imrān, the sons of az-Zarr, went into her presence, exulting over the fate of Ibn Najib ad-Daulah. They came forth exclaiming that the Jurist had indeed spoken the truth in reporting the words of 'Abd Allah ibn 'Abbās (cousin of the Prophet):—"We used," he said, "to listen to the traditions preserved by 'Ā'ishah (the Prophet's widow), but never left her presence without having been reminded that she was a woman." This was their last interview with the Queen.

THE HISTORY OF [THE DYNASTY OF] AZ-ZURAY', SON OF AL-'ABBĀS, SON OF AL-KARAM THE YĀMITE, PRINCE OF ADEN.

THE Banu Zuray' were descended from Hamdān, and from Jusham, son of Yām, son of Aṣghā.

Their ancestor, Ibn al-‘Abbās* son of al-Karam, had gained credit by his conduct in past times, and especially by the assistance he gave to the Dā’y ‘Aly, son of Muḥammad the Sulayhite, when the latter was engaged in promoting the Fāṭimite Khalifah al-Mustanṣir’s supremacy over Yaman, and again by joining the Dā’y al-Mukarram, son of ‘Aly, in his attack upon Zabīd and in the release of the Honourable Lady Asmā, daughter of Shihāb, from the hands of Sa‘īd al-Aḥwal, son of Najāh.

The events that raised the family to the Principality of Aden were as follows. When ‘Aly son of Muḥammad the Sulayhite conquered Aden, the city was under the rule of the Banu Ma’n [who had subdued it as well as Lahj, Abyan, Shihṛ and Ḥaḍramaut. He allowed them to remain in possession as governors under his authority. When al-Mukarram married the Honourable Lady Sayyidah, his father gave her Aden and its neighbourhood as her dowry. The Banu Ma’n accordingly paid her tribute so long as the Dā’y ‘Aly son of Muḥammad the Sulayhite lived; but when he was killed, in the year we have mentioned (A.H. 473), they declared themselves independent].⁵⁷

The King al-Mukarram thereupon marched against them, conquered the city and put an end to the supremacy of the Banu Ma’n. He placed their country under the rule of al-‘Abbās and Mas‘ūd, the two sons of al-Karam. He appointed the residence of the former at Ta‘kar-‘Aden, which adjoins the gate of the city, and [gave him authority over] the trade with the interior. To Mas‘ūd he gave the castle of al-Khadrā, with authority over the coast and shipping, and command of the city.⁵⁸ He made 49 them take oath to the Honourable Lady the Queen Sayyidah, daughter of Aḥmad, because aṣ-Sulayḥi had endowed her with the city of Aden when he married her to his son al-Mukarram in the year 461. From that year* the revenues of Aden were uninterruptedly paid to her until [the death of] al-Mukarram. The amount was one hundred thousand dinārs, occasionally somewhat more, and in other years somewhat less. On the death of al-Mukarram, al-'Abbās and Mas'ūd, the two sons of al-Karam, continued faithfully to fulfil their obligations to the Queen. But after their death [and that of Zuray' son of al-'Abbās, Abu Su'ūd son of] Zuray' and Abu 'l-Gharāt son of Mas'ūd proclaimed their independence at Aden.† Al-Mufaḍḍal ibn Abi 'l-Barakāt marched against them and a war took place which ended in a treaty, whereby it was agreed that half the revenues of Aden should be paid to the Queen. Upon the death of al-Mufaḍḍal ibn Abi 'l-Barakāt, the Princes of Aden discontinued the payment of the Queen's half of the revenues. As'ad ibn Abi 'l-Futuḥ, son of al-Malik al-Mufaḍḍal's uncle, proceeded to the spot and concluded an agreement, whereby a fourth of the revenues was to belong to the Queen. When the Banu az-Zarr rebelled at Ta'kar, the Princes of Aden again discontinued payment, and the Queen was thenceforward unable to draw anything from Aden, in consequence of the death of all her leading men. Ibn Najīb ad-Daulah made no attempt to do anything in the matter.

Such were the circumstances under which the Banu 'l-Karam ruled over Aden, and I will now proceed to relate the divisions that occurred between them.

Al-Mufaḍḍal ibn Abi 'l-Barakāt, in the course of one of his wars, attacked Zabīd. He was accompanied by Zuray', son of al-'Abbās, and by the latter's uncle Mas'ūd, son of al-Karam, who were at that time Princes of Aden. Both were killed at the gates of Zabīd, and they were succeeded at Aden by Abu 's-Su'ūd son of Zuray', and by Abu 'l-Gharāt son of Mas'ūd. They were succeeded in the rulership over Aden by the Dā'y Saba, son of Abu 's-Su'ūd, and Muḥammad, son of Abu 'l-Gharāt. Next came Saba's son 'Aly al-A'azz al-Murtaḍa, together with 'Aly, son of Abi 'l-Gharāt, and then the Dā'y Muḥammad, son of Saba.⁵⁹ 'Aly ibn Abi 'l-Gharāt was the last descendant of Mas'ūd.

The Dā'y Muḥammad ibn Saba was succeeded by his son 'Imrān. He died, and after him the country remained faithful in its allegiance to the family of Zuray', until the Zurayites were deposed by Sultān al-Mu'azzam Shams ad-Daulah Turān Shah, brother of Saladin son of Ayyūb, in the month of Dhu 'l-Ḳa'dah [A.H. 569]. The Princes of Aden were at that time Muḥammad and Abu 's-Su'ūd, the two sons of 'Imrān, son of Muḥammad, son of Saba. Ibn Hurābah took a part in the events at Aden, neither the particulars nor the date of which I am able to recollect; but there have been none in the family of al-Karam nobler than 'Imrān, son of Hurābah (Muḥammad?), or than Mufaddal, son of Zuray'. Nobility of character, though less than theirs, would be beyond power of description. The family of the Banu 'l-Karam are also known by the name of adh-Dhīb. They were, next to the Sulayhites, the most distinguished of the Arab ruling families in Yaman.

Upon the death of Muḥammad, son of Abu 'l-Gharāt, son of Mas'ūd, son of al-Karam, he was succeeded by his brother 'Aly son of Abu 'l-Gharāt. He possessed the castle of al-Khadrā, commanding the sea, the shipping and the city. The Dā'y Saba, son of Abu Su'ūd, son of Zuray', son of al-'Abbās, son of al-Karam the Yāmite, who bore the titles of the Unparagoned, the Victorious, Glory of the Empire, Honour of the Khalīfate, Right Arm of the Empire, Sword of the Imām, Crown and Chief of the Arabs, Dā'y of the Prince of the Faithful,—shared the sovereignty over Aden with the Sulṭān 'Aly son of Abu 'l-Gharāt. He held its gates and wielded authority over all that entered the city from the land side. He owned the fortress of Dumlūwah,* Ar-Ramā (?), Sāmi', Maṭrān (?), and Dhubbān; also part of al-Ma'āfir and of Janad. His possessions in the highlands were extensive.⁶⁰ His sons were al-A'azz 'Aly, Muḥammad, al-Mu-faddal, Ziyād, and Rauḥ.

HOW THE SOVEREIGNTY OF 'ALY IBN ABI 'L-GHARĀT CAME TO AN END AT ADEN, AND HOW IT PASSED INTO THE HANDS OF THE DĀ'Y SABA.

It has been related to me by the Dā'y Muḥammad son of Saba and by certain Sheykhs of Aden, that they knew Ibn al-Khazary Abu 'l-Kāsim as deputy of 'Aly ibn Abu 'l-Gharāt over one half of Aden, and 51 Sheykh Aḥmad ibn 'Attāb al-Hadhaly as deputy of Saba son of Abu 's-Su'ūd, over the other half. Ibn al-Khazary dealt unrighteously, in the division of the revenues, with Aḥmad ibn 'Attāb, and (his friends) the dependents of 'Aly son of Abu 'l-Gharāt, stretched forth their hands oppressively over the people. They created disorder and disturbance in the city and they cavilled at the Dā'y Saba, making use of language calculated to excite anger and to offend their adversaries' pride. The Dā'y was meanwhile assiduously occupied, through good report and through evil report, in the collection of money and corn. All who looked to him for protection were ill-treated and oppressed, the followers of 'Aly being the more powerful party. The Dā'y bore his injuries in silence, but when his patience seemed likely to lead to the extinction of his authority, he determined upon an open struggle with his enemies. He appointed his deputy, the Sheykh as-Sa'īd al-Muwaffāḡ Bilāl son of Jarīr, over Aden, and ordered him to stir up the people, and to promote war in the city. Bilāl, who was a man of energy and sagacity, obeyed. Saba meanwhile collected a force of Arabs from among the Banu Hamdān, and from among the tribes of Janb ibn As'ad (ibn Hurab?), 'Anbas ('Ans?), Khaulān, Ḥimyar, Madhhij, and others. He hurried down from the mountains, [from Dumlūwah,] and confronted his enemies in Wadi Laḡj. The Dā'y Saba possessed in that valley a walled village, known by the name of Bany Abbah,⁶¹ which he occupied with his brethren of the family of Zuray'. The retainers of his kinsman Mas'ūd possessed in the same valley a large walled city called az-Za'āzi'. The two parties encamped near their respective towns, and they fought one another with unexampled determination.

* Khazraji says (see extracts in Note 57) that Dumlūwah was captured by Zuray' in A.H. 480.

The cruelty of our kindred inflicts a deeper wound—than the blows of a sharp-cutting sword.⁶²

I have been told by the Dā'y Muḡammad ibn Saba, that he was out on one occasion with a reconnoitring party for Saba. They came in sight of 'Aly ibn Abi 'l-Gharāt and of his uncle Manī' ibn Mas'ūd. No horse, said the son of Saba, ever carried braver or bolder men than these two. "We took to flight," he continued, "but we were overtaken by Manī' ibn Mas'ūd." "Tell your father, O youth," he shouted, "to stand firm, for this evening there shall surely be kisses bestowed upon us by the Jushamite maidens within his tents."⁶³ When I informed my father of these words, he rode forth in person and addressed the Banu adh-Dhīb, who were present, and who were his nearest kinsmen: "The mercenary Arab horsemen (their allies) were not equal," he said, "to the heat of battle. Fire can be mastered only by him that kindles it. Meet your kinsmen and bear the fierce heat of battle yourselves, otherwise there is nought before you but defeat and disgrace."

The two armies joined in action and one of our horsemen, charging Manī' son of Mas'ūd, dealt him a thrust with his lance, which divided his upper lip and the extremity of his nose. The battle raged on both sides with lance-thrusts, heavy blows of the sword and the destruction of horses. The assembled Arabs looked eagerly on, but the Banu Hamdān at length charged, and interposed themselves between the two parties. At the same moment, the combatants were separated by the Lahj, which came rushing in a torrent down its bed. The two parties stood still on either bank of the stream, conversing with one another. The Dā'y Saba, or some other person, turned towards Manī' ibn Mas'ūd. "What sayest thou," he asked, "O Abu Mudāfi', of the Jushamite maidens' kisses this evening?" "I say of them," answered Manī', "as has been said by the poet al-Mutanabbi:—

Lance-thrusts to those that love them are as kisses."⁶⁴

Manī'u's answer has ever since been greatly praised and admired, by reason of the aptness of his quotation to the circumstances.

The war at az-Za'āzi', said to me the Dā'y Muḥammad ibn Saba, endured for two years. 'Alī son of Abu 'l-Gharāt at first distributed money without taking account thereof, whilst the Dā'y abstained from similar liberality, and the minds of the people were nigh to being turned against him ; but when 'Aly's cause gave way, the Dā'y expended money with a liberality which it would never have entered the mind of any man to expect. I recollect, he continued, that on a certain day, a member of the tribe of Hamdān came into the presence of the Dā'y Saba, who was then occupying a tent in his camp. "Let me be a partaker of thy bounty, O Abu Ḥimyar," said the Hamdānite. No one was with them but myself. "Thou knowest," continued the man, "that war is a devouring fire, and that men and horses are its fuel. I desire of thee that thou pay me the price of my blood, which amounts to one thousand dinārs." The Dā'y consented. "Also," continued the man, "the blood money of my son So and so, and of his brother." He received two thousand dinārs on their account. "May God preserve thee from evil, O Abu Ḥimyar," he thereupon said, "but there remains a claim for the horses that were destroyed." "Did destruction extend to the horses?" asked the Dā'y. "Pay me the price of the horses," answered the Hamdānite, "as thou hast paid me the blood money." The Dā'y handed over to him a purse containing five hundred dinārs. "But there is," said the man, "another thing which I think thy generosity, O Abu Ḥimyar, will not allow thee to deny me." "What is it?" "I desire to marry So and so, daughter of Such a one. Thou knowest how distinguished a family they are, and I am not possessed of sufficient wealth to approach them in a suitable manner." The Dā'y gave one hundred dinārs. "Mayest thou prosper and increase in wealth," said the Hamdānite. "There remains but one thing more. It would ill become me to marry whilst my two sons are unable to do so." The Dā'y gave him two hundred dinārs, for each son one hundred. The Hamdānite arose, but on reaching the entrance of the tent, he came back and said: "By Allah! I will not, of a certainty, ask thee another thing save this one, for which I have returned. I have a daughter who has not a husband. An evil thing it were that I and her brothers should marry, whilst she remains single." "What is to be done?" asked the Dā'y. "Pay me a sum wherewith I may be able to marry her." The Dā'y gave him one hundred dinārs more and quoting the poet's saying, in the rajaz metre, he exclaimed:—

"Zayd's beard had to be thinned, and it was plucked out by the roots."

I was informed by the Dā'y Muḥammad ibn Saba and by Bilāl ibn Jarīr al-Muḥammady, that Saba expended upon the war with Sulṭān 'Aly son of Abu l'-Gharāt, three hundred thousand dinārs. His means were then exhausted, and he borrowed money from the merchants of Aden who supported his cause, such as the Sharīf Abu 'l-Ḥasan Muḥammad ibn Abi 'l-'Omari, a descendant of (the second Khalīfah) 'Omar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb, Sheykh Abu 'l-Ḥasan 'Aly ibn Muḥammad ibn A'yan, Zāfir ibn Farāḥ and others.

- 54 The Dā'y Saba died at Aden, seven months after his conquest of az-Za'āzi', still owing on account of the money he had borrowed, a debt of thirty thousand dinārs, which was paid by his son, al-A'azz 'Aly ibn Saba. The Sheykh as-Sa'īd Bilāl, son of Jarīr al-Muḥammady, told me that when he took the fortress of al-Khadrā at Aden, and captured the Honourable Lady Bahjah, mother of Sulṭān 'Aly ibn Abi 'l-Gharāt, he found treasures under her keeping which it was not possible for him to match, although the whole of Aden had been in his possession for a considerable length of time. From Aden to Lahj, he also said, is the distance of a night's journey, and he remembered writing from Aden with the news of the conquest of the city, and of his having captured al-Khadrā. He sent a messenger with the glad tidings to the Dā'y Saba ibn Abi Su'ūd. The same day on which he took al-Khadrā, the Dā'y captured the city of az-Za'āzi', and Bilāl's messenger met one bringing similar glad tidings from the Dā'y, a coincidence which, as he observed, was one of the most remarkable recorded in history.

'Aly ibn Abi 'l-Gharāt took refuge in the two fortresses of Munīf and al-Jabalah (?). They belonged to the people of Saba Suhayb, whose country is the higher portion of Lahj.⁶⁵ He, Muḥammad ibn Manī' ibn Mas'ūd and Ri'yah son of Abu 'l-Gharāt, were slain by Muḥammad ibn Saba at Lahj in the year 545.

The Dā'y Saba entered Aden, but, as we have stated, he lived in it for only seven months. He was buried at the foot of at-Ta'kar within the city. He bequeathed his crown to his son 'Aly al-A'azz. His death occurred in A.H. 533, one year after the death of the Honourable Lady, the Queen (Sayyidah).

The Amīr al-A'azz al-Murtaḍa 'Aly, son of Saba, dwelt at Duḡlūwah. He meditated putting Bilāl to death at Aden, but died of consumption. He bequeathed the crown to his sons Hātīm, 'Abbās, Maṣṣūr, and Mufaddal, all of whom were in their infancy. He appointed Anīs al-A'azzi and the Governor Yaḥya ibn 'Aly, who was his wazīr and secretary, to be guardians of the children.

Muḥammad son of Saba, had fled from his brother, seeking refuge at Ta'izz and Ṣabir with the Amīr Maṣṣūr ibn Mufaddal ibn Abi 'l-Barakāt, from whom he received protection. When 'Aly died at Duḡlūwah, Bilāl sent certain Hamdānites from Aden. They took Muḥammad ibn Saba from under the protection of Mānṣūr ibn al-Mufaḍḍal, 55 and brought him down to Aden. Bilāl placed him upon the throne and made the people and officers of the government swear obedience unto him. He married him to his daughter and the wedding was celebrated with great splendour. He besieged Anīs and the Governor Yaḥya ibn 'Aly at Dumlūwah. The fortress was taken, and the whole country submitted to Bilāl. When I reproached Anīs for having surrendered Dumlūwah, a place of great strength, he answered that had he not submitted the female slaves and women would have beaten him to death with their clogs. Whilst the siege was proceeding he heard them, he said, saying to one another: "Curses be upon the slave who covets the like of what we require. Who is he to oppose one so much better for us than himself?" meaning thereby the brother of their lord, Muḥammad ibn Saba.

The Kādi ar-Rashīd Aḥmad ibn az-Zubayr had started from the Holy Gates (of the Imperial Palace at Cairo) in A.H. 534, with a charter of investment to the noble office of Dā'y, in the name of al-A'azz al-Murtada 'Aly, son of Saba. On his arrival, he found that 'Aly was dead, and he invested Muḥammad son of Saba, giving him the titles of the Most Great, the Crowned, the Mighty. Upon Muḥammad's wazir Bilāl son of Jarīr, he bestowed the titles of the Auspicious Chief, the Divinely-assisted, the Righteous.

The Dā'y Muḥammad was a man of a generous disposition, universally praised, fond of eulogy, liberal in his rewards to those who eulogized him, and himself a skilful improviser. He treated men of culture and learning with generosity and often introduced one or more verses in his conversation. I once saw him on a feast day in the Muṣalla,⁶⁶ outside the city of al-Juwwah (Ḥinwah?), seated on a spot where he suffered from the hot rays of the sun. Poets were present who strove with one another for liberty to recite their verses. "Tell them," he said to me, "and raise your voice so that they may hear, that they need not crowd around me, for I will not leave this place until they have finished." The poets were thirty in number and he rewarded each one.

I remember being with him one night in his palace at al-Juwwah, whence I intended proceeding to Aden. He had with him the two Kādis, Abu Bakr ibn Muḥammad al-Yāfi'y the Janadite and Abu 'l-Faṭh ibn as-Sahl, besides others of his principal courtiers, such as the two sons of Kāsim, Saba and Muḥammad, both of whom were shining lights, and one of the two, Muḥammad, was a physician and astrologer. Several of the eulogists I have spoken of, ten in number, had assembled at his gates. The Dā'y produced the poems and, turning to the persons assembled around him, he asked what reward he ought, in their opinion, to bestow upon the authors. His companions mentioned various sums, not one of which exceeded one hundred 56 dinārs. "Make it," he said, "three hundred dinārs. It is little enough." Thereupon he arose, and we superintended the division of the money.

We were present with him one day at the palace of al-Ḥajr, at a place known as al-Jannāt. Several poets were in his company, among others Safy ad-Daulah Aḥmad ibn 'Aly al-Ḥakly and the chief Kādi Abu Bakr ibn Muḥammad al-Yāfi'y the Janadite. He was a distinguished poet and author of extemporaneous verses, which no studied lines have ever excelled. Also the Kādi Yaḥya ibn Aḥmad ibn Abi Yaḥya, Kādi of Ṣan'ā, who, in the opinion of the people of Yaman, occupies a rank among poets equal to that of Ibn al-Kumm. The Dā'y extemporized two lines of verse on a certain metre that occurred to him, and he promised to give the robes he wore and the money about his person, to him among the persons present, who should be the first to supplement his verses. The poets were slow in the accomplishment of their task and the Kādi Abu Bakr ibn Muḥammad al-Yāfi'y distanced his companions in the race. He was close to me. I stole the paper out of his hand and I contrived to have his words in readiness on my lips. I thus appropriated the two lines he had composed. Standing up, I recited them to the Dā'y, and received the Kādi's prize. His shot hit the mark, but I had purloined the arrow, and I carried off the money and the robes. The stream of the Dā'y's liberality flowed in torrents for the benefit of the talented men about him. Not one of them but received a dress of honour and was rewarded with generous gifts.

In the year 549 (read 547) the Dā'y Muḥammad ibn Saba purchased, from the Amīr Maṣṣūr son of al-Mufaḍḍal, all the strongholds that had formerly belonged to the Sulayhites.* They consisted of twenty-eight castles and cities, among which were the cities of Dhu Jiblah, Dhu Ashraḳ, and Ibb. He bought them at the price of one hundred thousand dinārs. Maṣṣūr adopted his two fortresses of Sabir and Ta'izz as his places of residence and he divorced his wife.⁶⁷ Her name was Arwa, daughter of 'Aly, son of Abd Allah the Sulayhite. The Dā'y went up to Mikhlāf (Ja'far). He made Dhu Jiblah his place of residence and married the repudiated wife of the Amīr Maṣṣūr ibn al-Mufaḍḍal. He married also the Honourable Wuḥāzite Lady, the daughter of Sulṭān As'ad ibn Wā'il ibn 'Īsa. He removed her place of residence from as-Ṣariḥāni to the palace of Ibn Sibā'. The poets vied more than ever with one another in eulogies and congratulations on the subject of the fortresses he had acquired, and of the guarded and hidden jewels, the two wives above mentioned. The Dā'y was intoxicated with gladness by his successes and his hands were widely opened in distributions of gifts. One morning I went up to Dhu Jiblah, accompanied by the Sheykh Abu 'l-Ḥasan ibn 'Aly ibn Muḥammad the Sulayhite and by the Sheykh al-Murajja al-Ḥarāni, and from Dhu Jiblah we proceeded to the fortress of Ḥabb. Every paper that was handed to the Dā'y, he marked with the words, Honour belongeth to God alone. On reaching the castle, we reckoned up the papers in the possession of the poets. The Dā'y's treasurers were the Sheykh Ahmad ibn Mūsa ibn Abi 'z-Zarr the governor and Rayḥān al-Muḥammady. The sum to be paid was found to amount to five thousand dinārs. Sheykh Ahmad ibn Mūsa objected to it as unreasonably large and proposed that we should consult the Dā'y on the subject. Sheykh Rayḥān, however, answered that as for him, he was not wearied of his life. "By Allah!" he said, "if you speak to him on the subject, you will not leave his presence without undergoing the effects of his anger." The entire sum was paid that same day. The Kādi Yaḥya ibn Ahmad ibn Abi Yaḥya eulogized the Dā'y at Dhu Jiblah in an ode, for which he was rewarded with a donation of five hundred dinārs and with a dress of honour.

I arrived from Tihāmah at a time when I was indebted to the Prince for a sum he had confided to me for certain purposes of his own. I received a letter at Zabīd, sent from Dhu Jiblah, in which he invited me to join him, which I did. When I stood before him, he asked me what I had brought him. I answered enumerating the things I had procured for him, to which he replied that he wanted nought but verses. "By Allah!" I said to him, "I have not composed a word of poetry, nor can I do so for fear of the people of Zabīd, who make my verses a subject of reproach to me." He, however, desisted not from pressing me until he put me to shame and I improvised lines on the same metre as that upon which the Kādi Yaḥya ibn Aḥmad ibn Abi Yaḥya composed his verses. When I recited them he exclaimed: "I rewarded the Kādi with five hundred dinārs and a dress of honour. I reward you with a like sum out of the amount in your hands, but in bestowing upon you a dress of honour, I will distinguish you over him, by giving you the robes I have on at this moment." I received the money and the robes, and the circumstance was one of the causes of the hatred the Abyssinians entertained against me, and of their desire to kill me, a design from which I was preserved by God Most High.⁶³

The generous deeds performed by the Dā'y Muḥammad ibn Saba are more than it is possible to enumerate. He died in the year 548,* and was succeeded by his son 'Imrān ibn Muḥammad ibn Saba. The people of Zabīd prohibited me from going to him, and God decreed my journey to Egypt in A.H. 551, as envoy from the prince of the two great and holy cities. I obtained, on returning to Yaman, a letter from Malik aṣ-Ṣāliḥ ('Ṭalāī' ibn Ruzayk) to the Dā'y 'Imrān son of Muḥammad, asking him for a settlement of the account of moneys, for which, at the time of his father's death, I was still indebted and which amounted to three thousand dinārs. "What is the purport of Malik aṣ-Ṣāliḥ's letter," inquired the Dā'y. The Kādi ar-Rashīd informed him in reply that it asked for a settlement of the account. "Let 'Omārah offer us two lines of verse," answered the Dā'y, "in which he shall strictly observe the laws of rhyme, and the account shall be regulated." Then he asked for paper, and wrote as follows:—

"In the name of God, the Merciful, the Gracious. I hereby declare, and I am 'Imrān, son of the Mighty Dā'y Muḥammad, son of the Most Noble Dā'y Saba, son of Abu Su'ūd, son of Zuray', son of 'Abbās the Yāmīte, that the Jurist 'Omārah, son of al-Ḥasan * the Ḥakamīte, is exempt from all liability for the money he owed and was unable to pay to our lord the Dā'y Muḥammad son of Saba, amounting to two thousand seven hundred Malikīyah dinārs."

I again departed from Arabia in the year 552. Travellers arriving in Egypt from Yaman never ceased relating, touching the strength of character of the Dā'y and his generosity, things fit to humble Fortune when it shapes the course of events and the rain of heaven, when its copious and beneficent showers water the thirsty soil.

He died in the year 560, leaving three sons, Muḥammad, Abu Su'ūd and Manṣūr, none of whom has yet attained the years of manhood at the present time, namely the month of Muḥarram of the year 564 of the Hijrah, the blessings of God and His peace be upon its originator.⁶⁹

The following is a slight sketch (a supplement to the foregoing particulars), poor and inadequate as the residue of liquid at the bottom of a cup, of the history of the Auspicious, the Divinely-assisted, the Righteous Chief, Abu 'n-Nadi Jarīr son of Bilāl (read Bilāl son of Jarīr) al-Muḥammady.

We have already mentioned that he governed ⁵⁹ Aden on behalf of his master Saba. 'Aly al-A'azz allowed him to remain, and the city continued under his rule from the year 534 until 546 or 547, when he died. Worldly greatness is surely vanity! ⁷⁰

I have been told by Sheykh Ma'mar ibn Aḥmad ibn 'Attāb, and by the learned scholar Abu Bakr ibn Aḥmad al-'Abdi, both of whom possessed special knowledge of all that relates to Bilāl, that he left in money alone six hundred and fifty thousand Maliki dinārs and upwards of three hundred thousand dinārs in Egyptian coin. He left also several buhārs weight⁷¹ of silver plate, consisting of ornaments, horses' and mules' trappings, swords and lances, inkstands, basins and ewers, candlesticks, Ma'āsh (?) articles for presents, bath-basins, drinking-cups, cloaks (?), silver lace, utensils encrusted with gold, Ṣulayḥi daggers, silver goblets and ba'liyat (?), weighing altogether five buhārs and two hundred pounds. As to clothing and merchandise, stores and warehouses were filled with them. Thus it was also in the matter of perfumes and such like. Also accoutrements and arms, rarities from India and beautiful objects from China, from North Africa and from 'Irāk, variegated stuffs (?) from Egypt, from 'Omān and from Kirmān, all in quantities which it is impossible to reckon. All passed over by his bequest into the possession of his master the Dā'y Muḥammad, son of Saba. The latter in the course of two years spent the whole in works of piety and benevolence.

Bilāl died leaving several sons, grown up men. Among them were the Sheykh Mudāfi' son of Bilāl, who succeeded him in the office of wazīr. He died, and the wazīr Abu 'l-Faraj Yāsir, son of Bilāl al-Muḥammady, assumed the guardianship of the two young Amīrs, the sons of 'Imrān ibn Muḥammad, as well as that of their brother Manṣūr.* Yāsir is not inferior to his father in resolution and strength of character, or in bravery. As for the virtue of generosity, he is renowned for it, he is celebrated for it, and he is surnamed after it.

* The above is the nearest sense I can give to the much mutilated sentence in our MS. But there is practically no room for doubt that a version, which represents Yāsir as the guardian of 'Imrān's children, is substantially incorrect. See Note 69.

60 HISTORY OF THE FAMILY OF NAJĀH, THE ABYSSINIAN KINGS OF ZABĪD.

AL-Mu'ayyad Nāṣir ad-dīn Najāh continued to rule over Tihāmah, from the dominions of Ibn Ṭarf to Aden, the kings of the highlands showing respect for his dynasty, and dreading his power. This endured until the Dā'y 'Aly son of Muḥammad the Sulayhite brought about his death, by means of a slave girl, whom he sent to Najāh as a present, in the year 452. The sons of Najāh retained possession of Tihāmah for two years after their father's death, and during that period affairs were conducted by one of their freedmen, of the name of Kahlān. They were men of resolute character, but some members of the family were still in their youth.

Ere long the Dā'y 'Aly the Sulayhite dispossessed them of their kingdom (in A.H. 455), and after their arrival in the Island of Dahlak they became dispersed. Mu'ārik, the eldest of the family, in an access of folly committed suicide. As for adh-Dhakhīrah, she had barely attained the age of puberty. Sa'īd al-Aḥwal, who afterwards slew the Sulayhite, (and Jayyāsh) were the two manliest characters of their house. Each cultivated literature, and enjoyed a prolonged life and great power. But their father Najāh brought up their elder brother Mu'ārik to succeed him.

Jayyāsh disguised himself and entered the city of Zabīd. Having recovered possession of certain deposits due to him by 'Abd ar-Rahman ibn Ṭāhir al-Kaybi, he returned to Dahlak, where he remained for a certain length of time, in the days of aṣ-Sulayhī, applying himself with distinguished success to the acquisition of learning. Sa'īd al-Aḥwal and he were born of the same mother, but Sa'īd was the elder, and the adventures he met with are the strangest that ever were recorded.

He departed from Dahlak for Zabīd in anger with his brother Jayyāsh, who had prevented him from practising treachery against the Prince of Dahlak. Sa'īd concealed himself at Zabīd in the house of the Ra'īs Mulā'ib the Khaulānite. This man belonged to the lower orders of the people, but he was more than any other person attached to the family of Najāh. Sa'īd dug for himself a refuge in the grounds occupied by the dwelling-places of Mulā'ib, and he generally abode therein. He then wrote to his brother Jayyāsh at Dahlak, ordering him to come to Zabīd, and announcing the speedy downfall of the Sulayhites and the restoration of their own family. On Jayyāsh's arrival, Sa'īd openly rose against his enemies at the head of a band of seventy men. Not one of them possessed a horse, nor had they any other weapon than iron 61 nails mounted on palm-sticks. Aḥmad ibn Falāḥ, chief of the Office of Control* at Zabīd, has told me that when Sa'īd went forth from the city, he and his followers met a mounted soldier. They killed him, and Sa'īd appropriated the horse he was riding. Sa'īd started from Zabīd, on his way to attack aṣ-Ṣulayḥi, at the close of the ninth day of Dhu 'l-Ḳa'dah, of the year 473.

“We set forth,” says Jayyāsh son of Najāh, “by the sea-board road, avoiding the royal highway for fear of being intercepted by the enemy. By forced marches the distance to al-Mahjam could be performed in three days. The news of our insurrection had preceded us and had reached aṣ-Ṣulayḥi. Both the highlands and the plains were, at the time, filled with rumours.† The time had come, it was said, for the uprising of Sa'īd al-Aḥwal son of Najāh, and there was hardly a mosque or place of assembly, a college, or market, or public road, in which the matter was not discussed, though we endeavoured, from motives of prudence, to act secretly. But Sa'īd openly made oath by God Most High, that he would slay his enemy, that he was the destined master of the day, and he spoke in that tone to most people.

* Diwān at-Tahkik. See Makrīzi's Khitaṭ, vol. ii. p. 401.

“Aṣ-Ṣulayḥi, on hearing of our revolt, despatched against us a detachment of his army, consisting of five thousand Abyssinian spearmen, most of whom were our own servants and kinsmen, and he ordered them to bring him the heads of the squint-eyed Sa'īd, of his brother, and of his other companions.

“By adopting the sea-board road, we avoided the troops. I remember that when night closed in upon us at al-Murāwi'ah,* in the province of al-Kadrā, a man stepped forward from behind the hillocks in the valley, and addressing us, said that we had doubtless strayed from our way. We replied that it was so, whereupon he desired us to follow him, and he walked before us until day broke, when we lost sight of him. We underwent great fatigue and suffering from travelling barefooted by day and by night. Sa'īd, walking in our midst whilst the horse was led, continually exclaimed: ‘O morning of prosperity, of triumph, and of happiness! Make ye haste unto the man, lest to-morrow he die otherwise than by our hands. By Allah! to-morrow's sun shall not rise and he still in this world!’” We continued our march without intermission, until we at length entered the borders of the camp.

* Al-Murāwi'ah is mentioned in the Tāj al-'Arūs as the name of a village in Yaman, the burial-place of a member of the family of al-Ahdal.

“ We were mistaken for servants and followers of aṣ-Ṣulayḥi, and none heeded us, saving ‘Abd Allah son of Muḥammad the Sulayhite, who, mounting his charger, suddenly called to his brother : ‘ To horse, my lord ! for this, by Allah, is al-Aḥwal son of Najāh, with his armed following, of whom we have received warning by As‘ad ibn Shihāb’s letter from Zabīd.’ Aṣ-Ṣulayḥi, in reply to his brother, exclaimed that he was destined to die at no other place but ad-Duhaym and Bīr (the well of) Umm Ma‘bad. He believed that the well (referred to in the prediction) was that bearing the same name, at which the Apostle of God (upon whom be blessings and salutations of peace) halted, on the occasion of his flight in company with Abu Bekr. But Mash‘al the ‘Akkite exclaimed : ‘ Defend thyself, for this, by Allah, is the well of Duhaym ibn ‘Abs, and that mosque stands on the site of the tent of Umm (the mother of) Ma‘bad, son of al-Ḥārith the ‘Absite.’ On hearing these words,” says Jayyāsh, “ aṣ-Ṣulayḥi was overcome with despair, and he urined into his chain-armoured tunic. He never moved from the place where he stood, until we struck off his head with his own sword. I was the first to strike him, but one of Najāh’s slaves took part with me in the deed. He it was that pierced aṣ-Ṣulayḥi with his spear, and I struck off his head with my own hand and mounted it upon the shaft of the royal umbrella. I ordered the drums to be beat and the trumpets to be sounded, and I mounted Ṣulayḥi’s Ḥadramauti horse named adh-Dhabbāl. As for ‘Abd Allah son of Muḥammad the Sulayhite, the bravest of Arab horsemen, he charged us and killed several of our people. One of our men grappled him, and both fell to the ground. ‘ Kill us both,’ cried the man, ‘ for my people will rejoice at my not having perished at the hands of the vile.’ Sa‘īd thereupon,” says Jayyāsh, “ transfixed both with a spear at one blow.

He then struck off the head of 'Abd Allah, imagining him to be his brother 'Aly the Sulayhite.

“Sa'īd mounted the horse of 'Abd Allah, and with the two heads borne aloft before him he proceeded to the door of the mosque, in which the Lady Asmā, daughter of Shihāb and wife of aṣ-Ṣulayḥi, was. ‘Come forth,’ he said to her, and offer thy morning greeting unto the two Sultāns!’ ‘May God never bestow upon thee the greeting of his favours, O Aḥwal!’ she replied. And, with her face uncovered, she recited the line composed by Imru 'l-Ḳais the Kindite,—

3 Verily none so insolently trample upon thee as—the feeble boaster.
None so arrogant in humbling as he that hath been abased.⁷²

“Sa'īd sent a messenger to the five thousand, whom aṣ-Ṣulayḥi had despatched on the previous night with orders to slay him. ‘Aṣ-Ṣulayḥi,’ he said, ‘has suffered death. I am a man of your own race, and the honours I gain are acquired by you.’ He remained at the gate of the mosque, the two heads set up before him, and the air filled with the sound of the beating of drums, until the men arrived. They saluted him, and with their aid he plundered and captured and massacred the soldiers of aṣ-Ṣulayḥi. Sa'īd,” continues Jayyāsh, “became intoxicated with pride, and assumed a haughty demeanour even towards me his brother, son both of his father and of his mother. I advised him to show kindness to the Lady Asmā, and to grant an amnesty to the Princes of the Sulayhite family who accompanied her. They were one hundred and seventy in number, all mistrusted by Ṣulayḥi, who feared lest, in his absence, they should betray him. I advised him also to spare the Ḳahṫānite chieftains, who were likewise with her, thirty-five in number, to send, through the Princess, a letter to her son al-Mukarram son of 'Aly, to write that his blood feud was satisfied, that he had won back his kingdom, that in kindness to al-Mukarram he sent him his mother, guarded and protected, and that he had granted an amnesty to al-Mukarram's kinspeople. 'By Allah, my lord,' I said to him, 'if thou do this, the Banu Kaḥṭān will not dispute thy sovereignty over Tihāmah, and if thou decline my advice, their sense of wounded honour will to a certainty stir and impel them to invade thy country.' Sa'īd answered me in the words of the ancient poet,—

Beware of sparing the viper, after crushing her tail.—If thou art wise, her head shall share the fate of her tail.

“He then ordered the Sulayhites to be brought forth, and they were slain to the last man. The mercy of God be upon them! I saw an old man among them, who sought to protect himself behind his son, and the spear passed through the bodies of both. May God preserve us from the grievous pressure of calamity! I shall never forget,” continues Jayyāsh, “the sight of aṣ-Ṣulayḥī's head mounted upon the shaft of the royal umbrella, nor the voice of the Qur'an reader: Say, O God, Lord of Empire, Thou givest sovereignty unto whom Thou willest, and Thou takest it from whom Thou willest. Thou raisest whom Thou willest, and Thou abasest whom Thou willest. In Thy hands is all good, and 64 *Thy boundless power is over all things. Neither can I forget the words of the poet al-'Othmāni, part of an ode which he improvized on the spot, and in which he described the royal canopy:—

How unsightly was his face under its shade!—How comely his his head upon its stem!”

Three days after the battle, Sa'īd departed for Zabīd, carrying the two heads with him. The vain possession of a kingdom was one of the spoils of his victory, together with a large amount of booty. It comprised two thousand horses and three thousand camels, with their harness and furniture. He entered Zabīd on the sixteenth day of the month of Dhu 'l-Ḳa'dah of the year 473, with the heads of aṣ-Ṣulayḥi and his brother borne before the litter of the Honourable Lady Asmā daughter of Shihāb. He placed her in the house of Shaḥār, and the two heads were set up opposite her casement.

As'ad ibn Shihāb fled from Zabīd, and took refuge with al-Mukarram at Ṣan'ā. The death of aṣ-Ṣulayḥi filled the hearts of all men with dread of Sa'id ibn Najāh. The governors of the (mountain) fortresses seized possession of the places confided to their rule, and the authority of al-Mukarram was all but destroyed. That of Sa'id in Tihāmah, on the contrary, acquired great strength, and he sent persons to Abyssinia to purchase for him twenty (thousand) spearmen. Al-Mukarram continued deprived of all knowledge of his mother, the Honourable Lady Asmā daughter of Shihāb, until he attacked Zabīd, and rescued her in the manner we have already related. Sa'id subsequently returned,* recaptured the city, and expelled the governors appointed by al-Mukarram. He continued to rule over it until he was killed in A.H. 481, in the battle of the castle of Sha'ir, the result of a stragem contrived by Queen Sayyidah, daughter of Aḥmad, and wife of the King al-Mukarram, as has likewise been mentioned.

HOW JAYYASH SON OF NAJĀH WENT TO INDIA, ACCOMPANIED BY THE WAZĪR ḲASĪM AL-MULK ABU SA'ĪD KHALF SON OF ABU ṬĀHIR THE OMAYYAD, DESCENDANT OF SULEYMĀN IBN HISHĀM SON OF 'ABD AL-MALIK.

 “After these events I disguised myself, and I went to Aden, accompanied by the wazīr Khalf, son of 65 Abu Ṭāhir. We proceeded to India in the year 481, and after remaining in that country for six months, we returned the same year to Yaman. One of the most wonderful things I experienced in India was on the occasion of our meeting a man who came from Sarandīb. Everyone rejoiced at his presence, and it was believed that he possessed knowledge of the future. Upon our questioning him respecting our affairs, he gladdened us with predictions, not one word of which failed to be accomplished. I bought an Indian slave girl, and she arrived with me in Yaman, being at that time in her fifth month of pregnancy. On landing at Aden, I sent the wazīr Khalf in advance of me to Zabīd, by the sea-board road, and I ordered him to spread reports of my having died in India, to apply for a personal amnesty, to acquaint me with the actual situation of our affairs, and to inform me who of our people remained with the Abyssinians. I myself went to Dhu Jiblah, where I fully acquainted myself with the condition of al-Mukarram ibn 'Aly, how he had given himself over to the pursuit of pleasure, how he had become physically weakened, and how he had abandoned the direction of affairs to his wife, Queen Sayyidah daughter of Aḥmad, From the highlands I descended to Zabīd, where I joined the wazīr Ibn Khalf, and received from him intelligence respecting our friends, our kinsmen and our servants, which filled me with satisfaction. He told me that they were in great numbers in the country, but that they wanted a leader. I assumed the guise of an Indian, allowed my beard to spread over my face, my hair and nails to grow long, and I covered one of my eyes with a black cloth. I dwelt close to the royal palace, and when people went forth in the morning, I used to proceed to the maṣṭabah (bench at the outer gate) of ‘Aly ibn al-Ḳumm, who was wazīr to the governor appointed by the King al-Mukarram ibn ‘Aly. I heard him say one day (as he went past?), ‘By Allah, if I could find a dog of the family of Najāh, of a certainty I would make him King of Zabīd.’ This was said in consequence of some cause of offence that had arisen between him and the governor As‘ad ibn Shihāb. Ḥusayn, son of ‘Aly the Ḳummite, the poet came forth on a certain day. He was at that time the most skilful chess-player of all the inhabitants of Zabīd. ‘Indian,’ he asked me, ‘art thou a good chess-player?’ I answered that I was. We played, and I beat him at the game, whereupon he barely restrained himself from violence against me. He went in to his father and told him that he had been 66 beaten at chess. His father replied that there had never been a person at Zabīd who could overcome him, excepting only Jayyāsh the son of Najāh, and he, he continued, has died in India. ‘Aly, the father of Ḥusayn, then came forth to me. He was an exceedingly skilful player and we played together. I was unwilling to defeat him, and the match ended in a drawn game. He was greatly pleased with me, and admitted me to his intimacy. Every day and every evening he used to say: ‘God speed you unto us, O family of Najāh!’ At night I used to join the wazīr Ḳhālf, and we were parted during the day. I occupied myself, meanwhile, in writing to the Abyssinians who were scattered in the provinces, bidding them to be in readiness. When five thousand spearmen had assembled, dispersed in the outskirts of the city and within its walls, I told the wazīr Khalf that a certain sum was due to me by 'Omar ibn Suḥaym. I desired him to receive ten thousand dinārs and to distribute the money among the men who had assembled, which he did. I (again) saw the wazīr at night, and informed him that my Lord the Kā'id Ḥusayn ibn Salāmah had appeared to me in my sleep. He had promised me that the kingdom we desired to regain would return unto us, and that the event would occur on the night of the delivery of the Indian slave girl. Ḥusayn, I moreover told him, after speaking these words, had turned to a man on his right hand and had asked: 'Is it not so, O Prince of the Faithful?' and the man so addressed replied: 'Yea verily, and sovereignty will belong to the descendants of the child for a long period of time.'⁷³

"I remember that on a certain day," continues Jayyāsh, "'Aly ibn al-Ḳumm returned from the palace to his own house, in a state of extreme anger. On becoming calmer he said to me: 'Come up, Indian, that I may play chess with thee.' Whilst we were playing, his son Ḥusayn entered and beat one of his slaves with a whip. I was struck by the end of the whip, and I heedlessly uttered an exclamation such as habitually escaped me whenever anything startled me. The words I used were: 'I am Abu 'ṭ-Tāmi!' 'Indian,' asked the old man, 'what is thy name?' I answered, 'Bahr.' 'Bahr!' he said, 'by Allah! the epithet Abu 'ṭ-Tāmi is well suited to that name.'⁷⁴ I repented," continues Jayyāsh, "of what I had said, and I began to mistrust my companions.

"When the time had come for the recovery of our possessions, in accordance with God's decree, it happened that I played chess with Ḥusayn, the poet, son of al-Ḳumm. No person was present but 67 his father 'Aly, who sat on a raised seat, giving directions to his son. He promised Ḥusayn that if he defeated me, he would send him to al-Mukarram and to Queen Sayyidah, in charge of the revenues of that year, and that he would give him the present that would, as customary, be offered to the Governor of Tihāmah, a sum amounting to several thousand dinārs. I purposely played a careless game with Ḥusayn, desiring to conciliate his father, and I allowed him to win. Ḥusayn became intoxicated with joy and gave vent to his feelings in foolish words, with which he exulted over me. I bore with him for his father's sake, but he stretched forth his hand and snatched away the black cloth that covered one of my eyes. His father stood up reprobating the act, whilst I arose in extreme anger. An involuntary exclamation escaped me according to the habit I had contracted, and I uttered the words: 'I am Jayyāsh!' It was not possible for me to remain, but 'Aly ibn al-Ḳumm sprang after me, bare-footed and trailing his cloak. He overtook and stopped me, and then bringing forth a copy of the Holy Volume, he swore an oath upon it, which completely tranquillized me. No person was present, and I also took oath unto him. He ordered the palace of aṣ-Ṣulayhi, the Dār al-'Izz, to be vacated. It was carpeted and hung with curtains and the Indian slave girl was removed thither, together with male and female servants, provisions and furniture. He retained me in his house until night had set in, when he allowed me to depart. I entered the palace and found that the slave girl had given birth to my son al-Fātik, between sunset and the hour of evening prayer. 'Aly ibn al-Ḳumm came to me that night. He warned me that what had occurred could not long remain concealed from As'ad ibn Shihāb, and in reply I informed him that I had five thousand spearmen in the city. 'Victory is in thy hands,' replied 'Aly; 'declare thyself publicly.' I told 'Aly I was unwilling that harm should befall As'ad ibn Shihāb, who had done all he could for our family and children, and through whose influence they had been spared and treated with kindness. Ibn al-Ḳumm desired me, in reply, to act therein as I thought proper."

Jayyāsh ordered the drums and trumpets to be sounded. The people of the city and five thousand Abyssinians rose in arms along with him. Ibn Shihāb was taken prisoner. "Naught can defend us against you, O family of Najāh," he said to Jayyāsh, "for man's fortunes are as the buckets of a well (which rise full of water for the benefit now of one, then of another). But such as I ask not for mercy." "And such as thou, O Abu Hassān," 68 answered Jayyāsh, "shall not suffer harm." Jayyāsh treated As'ad and his children with kindness, and sent him forth with all the property he possessed, and with all his family.

"I took possession," says Jayyāsh, "of the Government House and of its contents, in the morning that followed the night on which my son Fātik was born, and the promises made to me by Ḥusayn ibn Salāmah were exactly fulfilled.

"Ere a month had elapsed, I was at the head of twenty thousand spearmen, men who were our servants and kinsmen and who were hitherto dispersed in the provinces.* Praised be He who exalteth them that were abased, and giveth abundance unto them that were in want!"

* I have suggested in a note to the Arabic text, the substitution—though not altogether satisfactory—of مستضعفين for مستضعين. The word متضععين has since then occurred to me as a more probable reading.

Thenceforward Jayyāsh suffered no material harm at the hands of al-Mukarram, none greater than incursions into the territories of Zabid. It was in this condition of affairs that Ḥusayn ibn al-Kumm composed the following line, addressed to Jayyāsh upon his slaying the chief Kādi al-Ḥasan (Ḥusayn?) ibn Abi 'Aḳāmah:—

Dost thou flee when al-Mukarram poiseth his lance?—And dost thou display thy bravery against one who neither sought favour nor excited hostility?⁷⁵

He alluded also to the same subject in an ode which will be mentioned hereafter.

Thou hast dealt unrighteously, O Jayyāsh, in slaying al-Ḥasan.—
By his wicked slaughter, thou hast destroyed (lit. trans-pierced) the glory (the eye) of his age.

Jayyāsh continued ruler of Tihāmah from 482 until the year 498, when he died, in the month of Dhu 'l-Ḥijjah (the last month of the year). The children he left were al-Fātik son of the Indian concubine, Maṣūr, Ibrahīm, 'Abd al-Wāhid, adh-Dhakhīrah and Mu'ārik. It is also said that Jayyāsh died in the month of Ramaḍān of the year 500, but the first-mentioned date is the more probable one.

He was succeeded by his son al-Fātik, who however was opposed by his brothers Ibrahīm and 'Abd al-Wāhid. The former was a perfect horseman as well as benevolent, cultured and generous, whilst 'Abd al-Wāhid was beloved and trusted by the army. They fought with one another, their father's slaves taking part in their divisions, but eventually al-Fātik son of Jayyāsh triumphed over his brother 'Abd al-Wāhid. He pardoned him, treated him with kindness, enriched him and conciliated him. As for Ibrahīm, he took refuge with As'ad ibn Wā'il ibn 'Isa the Wuhāzite, who received him with such hospitality as has never been surpassed. The slaves of Fātik had meanwhile increased in number and had waxed in power.

Fātik died in the year 503, leaving a son Manṣūr, below the age of maturity. His father's slaves placed him upon the throne, but Ibrahīm son of Jayyāsh, upon the death of his brother Fātik, collected troops and invaded Tihāmah. He was confronted by the slaves of Jayyāsh, and the two parties halted opposite one another near a village named [Huwayb, in Wādi Zabīd]. The city having been vacated by the officials of Fātik, who held the power of Ibrahīm son of Jayyāsh in small estimation, ‘Abd al-Wāhid, Ibrahīm's brother, arose in arms, took possession of Zabīd and seized the Government House. The eunuchs and servants came forth by night with their master Manṣūr, and fearing ‘Abd al-Wāhid on his account, they enabled him to escape by letting him down by means of a rope, from the walls of the city. Manṣūr took refuge with the retainers of his father Fātik, but the people turned away from him and from his supporters, and attached themselves to ‘Abd al-Wāhid on his becoming master of Zabīd, he being beloved by the troops.

When Ibrahīm son of Jayyāsh beheld that his brother had forestalled him in the attainment of supreme power at Zabīd and in the possession of the country's strongholds, he joined Ḥusayn ibn Abi 'l-Ḥafāṭ al-Hajūry, who was at that time at al-Jurayb. The Banu Abi 'l-Ḥafāṭ belong to the family of the Banu Jurayb son of Sharaḥbīl, and they are regarded as descendants of Hamdān.⁷⁶ As for al-Manṣūr son of Fātik and his father's slaves, they sought refuge with the King al-Mufaḍḍal son of Abu 'l-Barakāt the Himyarite Prince of Ta'kar, and at Dhu Jiblah, with the Honourable Lady the Queen Sayyidah, daughter of Aḥmad the Sulayhite, at whose hands they met with a hospitable reception. After a time the slaves of Fātik bound themselves by an agreement with al-Mufaḍḍal to relinquish in his favour one fourth of their country, in return for his alliance and for his aid against 'Abd al-Wāḥid son of Jayyāsh. Al-Mufaḍḍal accordingly drove 'Abd al-Wāḥid out of Zabīd and placed the supporters of Manṣūr in possession of the city. [This was in the year 504.] He then, however, formed a design to act treacherously towards the family of Fātik and to take possession of the country. But he received intelligence that the fortress of Ta'kar had been seized by certain Jurists and that they had possessed themselves of an amount of wealth such as no person had ever known. Al-Mufaḍḍal hastily left Zabīd, turning himself unto no one, and there happened that which we have already related, how he inflicted death upon himself by poison, on beholding his concubines in the midst of men, and clad in bright coloured apparel, singing with tabours in their hands.

Thenceforward supreme power was held by Manṣūr, son of Fātik and by his father's retainers. The descendants of Fātik occupied the throne as Princes of the country, and the wazīrs were selected from among the descendants of his slaves. Of these princes there was Manṣūr son of Fātik. Next was Fātik son of Manṣūr, whose mother was the Honourable and virtuous Lady, the distinguished Pilgrim ['Alam]. When Fātik son of Manṣūr died without issue, the succession passed on to the son of his paternal uncle, who bore likewise the name of Fātik, and who was son of Muḥammad son of Manṣūr, son of Fātik son of Jayyāsh (read son of Muḥammad son of Fātik son of Jayyāsh). His accession took place in the year 553 (read in 531, and he perished in 553). With him the dynasty came to an end, and in the year 554 its power passed into the hands of 'Aly ibn Mahdy, who had rebelled in Yaman.

The descendants of Fātik son of Jayyāsh possessed none but the outward attributes of royalty. The Khutbah was recited in their names next after that of the Abbasside Khalifah, the coinage bore their titles, they rode forth under the royal umbrella on festival days, and they ratified the decisions of the Council. But all actual power, that of commanding and forbidding, the conduct of affairs, the defence of the frontiers and the accrediting of envoys, belonged to their slaves the wazīrs, the slaves of Fātik son of Jayyāsh and of Maṣṣūr his son. Although these wazīrs were Abyssinians, no Arab king surpassed them in personal merit or in aught but in nobility of lineage. They were noted for generosity, for their brilliant estate, and for combining renown in war with celebrated achievements in times of peace.

The first to hold the office of wazīr was Anīs al-Fātiki, who was member of an Abyssinian tribe named the Jazalis, to which the kings of the dynasty of Najāḥ themselves belonged. Anīs was stern and harsh, greatly feared, but brave, celebrated among the people, and just. He fought against the Arabs 71 with the result that they were effectually deterred from making attacks upon Tihāmah. After a time he became arrogant and tyrannical, and raised for himself a vast and strongly-built palace, the halls of which measured thirty cubits in width, and which contained saloons of the width of forty cubits. He adopted also the use of the royal umbrella, and struck coins in his own name. He formed at length treasonable designs against his master al-Maṣṣūr; but knowledge of his intentions was divulged, through his favourites, to the slaves of Fātik, who contrived a plan for his overthrow. Their master Maṣṣūr son of Fātik [who had attained the years of discretion], prepared a feast in the Government House, to which he invited Anīs, and on the arrival of the wazīr he struck off his head. He made a selection from the goods and harīm of the wazīr. Among that which Manṣūr acquired by purchase out of the heritage of Anīs, was a slave girl, an accomplished singer, named 'Alam, who bore him a son of the name of Fātik. She was the Honourable and pious Lady, the assiduous performer of the pilgrimage by land and by sea, attended by natives of Yaman, whom she protected from the dangers of the journey and against unjust taxation and exactions.

Among other wazīrs, after Anīs, was the Sheykh Mann Allah al-Fātiki, the next after Ḥusayn ibn Salāmah to build walls around Zabīd. In his life are combined things that were creditable to him and others that were discreditable. Of the former were his splendid generosity, his bravery and his gravity of character. He it was who defeated Ibn Najīb ad-Daulah near the gate of Zabīd, and killed of his followers one hundred Arabs, three hundred Armenian archers and five hundred Blacks. [This was at the end of the year 518.] He fought another battle with As'ad ibn Abī 'l-Futūh, in which upwards of one thousand Arabs were killed. He also granted endowments to the Hanafite and Shāfi'ite Jurists' Colleges, which enriched them beyond all other similar establishments, with lands, articles of utility and convenience, and houses. He liberally rewarded his eulogists. I was told by the Jurist Abu 'Abd Allah Muḥammad ibn 'Aly as-Sahhāmi (the mercy of God be upon him !), who was tutor to the wazīr Mann Allah's sons, that he could remember having bound eulogistic verses in praise of the wazīr, and that they formed ten large volumes, the compositions of excellent, celebrated and well-known poets. It was Mann Allah who expelled Aḥmad ibn Mas'ūd al-Jazali and Muflīh al-Fātiki. They were the two leaders of the Abyssinian cavalry, and possessed the power of binding and loosing at Zabīd. The fears they entertained of Mann Allah compelled them to fly, and they sought refuge in the highlands. He thereby acquired absolute power, and his voice became supreme.

Other circumstances in the life of Mann Allah, such as here follow, must be remembered to his discredit. His first act, on being appointed wazīr after the slaying of Anīs, by Manṣūr son of Fātik son of Jayyāsh in the year 517, was to bring about the death of his master Manṣūr by poison, and to set upon the throne the Prince's son Fātik ibn Manṣūr, at that time a young child.⁷⁷

Manṣūr, his father Fātik and others of the family of Jayyāsh left at their death more than a thousand concubines. Every one of these fell into the hands of the wazīr Mann Allah, with the exception of ten women, favourites of Manṣūr son of Fātik. Among these was the Honourable Lady, the Queen, mother of Fātik son of Manṣūr. She forsook the palace and built unto herself a house outside the city, wherein the wazīr could not penetrate by night, either under a false pretence or with valid reason. Such was her position, notwithstanding that her son was King; but she guarded herself from danger by abandoning her son's palace, and she confided the care of the Prince to the eunuchs, his father's slaves. Another of these women was Umm Abi 'l-Jaysh (mother of Abu 'l-Jaysh), a native by birthplace and breeding. She had a daughter by Manṣūr, and received the name of Umm Abi 'l-Jaysh on account of the disorders we are relating.⁷⁸ She was of surpassing beauty and an accomplished singer. Her life was prolonged down to my time. I was in the habit of entering into her presence and of sitting before her, being trusted with the care of letters that passed between her and Sulṭān 'Abd Allah ibn As'ad ibn Wā'il the Wuḥāzite, who had married the daughter she had borne to Manṣūr son of Fātik. Another was the Honourable Lady Riyād. Also the Ladies Umm Abīha, Jinān al-Kubra and Tamanni. The mother of Fātik had no fellow-wife but the last-mentioned.

God having decreed the destruction of Mann Allah al-Fātiki, the wazīr fixed his desires upon the daughter of Mu'ārik son of Jayyāsh, who was celebrated for her beauty, and he asked her to surrender herself to him. She offered to ransom herself with forty virgins chosen from among her slaves, but he refused. She made complaint to the adherents of her uncle Fātik and of her cousin Manşūr son of Fātik, but they dreaded the wazīr and could not help her. Thereupon the Honourable Lady Umm Abi 'l-Jaysh said: "I will protect you against him." She brought the daughter of Mu'ārik son of Jayyāsh from the royal Palace to her own dwelling, and she then sent a message to Main Allah:—"You have given rise to reports by your manner of acting," she said to him, "injurious both to yourself and to us. If you had addressed yourself to me, I would have served you effectually and no person would have known." The wazīr was overjoyed and letters passed between him and the Lady, until at length he sent to tell the Princess that he would visit her at her house, in disguise, on the ensuing night. "God," she answered to the messenger, "hath raised the wazīr to an exalted rank, which forbids his doing as he proposes. I myself will visit him at his house." When it was night she accordingly came. She sang to him and he drank, and he was intoxicated with delight. She yielded herself to him, but she then brought about his death by means of a cloth impregnated with a deadly poison. His flesh mouldered away and he died that same night. The son of Manşūr buried the body in his stables. The earth was levelled and smoothed over the grave, and its site continues unknown unto this day. Mann Allah's death occurred on the night of Saturday, the fifteenth of Jamādi 'l-Awwal of the year 524.⁷⁹

He was succeeded in the office of wazīr to Fātik son of Manṣūr, by Ruzayk al-Fātiki, a brave and generous man.

As to his bravery, it has been related to me by Muḥammad ibn 'Abd Allah the Yāfi'ite and Ḥimyarite, who was secretary to the wazīr, that he saw Ruzayk al-Fātiki one Friday, a memorable day of rivalry between him and Muflīḥ. Seven spears were pointed against him, he wearing a double suit of mail. He cut through the greater number of the spears with his sword, and although two struck him, he retained a firm seat in his saddle. Muflīḥ 74 called out: "Cut down the horse, or the rider will not fall to the ground!" Ruzayk thereupon charged Muflīḥ, and with one blow aimed at the horse's back behind the saddle, he divided the animal into two separate parts. Muflīḥ fell to the ground, and the Banu Mash'al, who are an Arab tribe,* interposed for his protection. As to his generosity, it was chiefly shown to poets.

No man could eat so much as he, and his power to devour large quantities of food was such, that it became proverbial. He had thirty children, male and female. [After his death], the claims of the heirs to his estate and of those among his children and his children's children who died before the division, passed from one to another. The rights to the succession became subdivided and the problem of the division so complicated, that not one among the Doctors of the law was able to undertake its solution. The wazīr Muflīḥ, and the Kā'ids Ikbāl and Mas'ūd, retainers of Fātik, were each desirous of making purchases of land and houses from the estate, but were unable to do so in consequence of the impossibility of determining the portion belonging to each heir.

In the year 539 I found at Aden an old man, a native of Ḥaḍramaut, of the name of Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad al-Ḥāsib (the Reckoner). He was an accountant, skilled in the laws of inheritance, upwards of eighty years of age, and he was on his way to perform the pilgrimage. He was extremely poor and had never, since God created him, possessed so much as two dinārs. He disbelieved the statement of any person who asserted he had seen a sum of one thousand dinārs, for he had been brought up in a part of the country of Kindah adjoining ar-Raml. A ship was wrecked on the neighbouring sea-shore, and one of the persons on board, a learned and pious man, was cast on shore on the sands of ar-Raml, in the country of Kindah. This was the Sheykh Aḥmad al-Farāḍy the Jurist.*

I took him to my dwelling-place at Aden, I clothed him and gave orders that he should be hospitably treated and fed, that he be cleansed and that his beard and his hands and feet be stained with henna. Having thus provided for his comfort, we travelled together on the same camel from Aden to Zabīd, balancing one another's weight in the litter on either side. I promised that he should accompany me on the pilgrimage and that I would supply him with all his requirements. He rejoiced thereat, and relying upon my promises, his mind was set at ease.

I spoke to him one night, as we were riding, on the subject of the succession of the family of Ru-zayk, in which there were fifty-one separate interests. He rehearsed the particulars as if he were learning them by rote, and continued thus until dawn. Sleep did not take possession of me, owing to my exceeding rejoicing over his learning. He then said to me that if I would consent to halt at the well we had reached, foregoing our journey for that day, he would undertake not to recite his midday prayers without having first solved the problems of the division and acquainted me with the share of each heir, one by one. I agreed to his proposal, and at the hour of the midday meal he handed over to me a complete statement of the division, written by his hand. And, by Allah! a long period of time had been spent, in combined efforts to solve the problem, by 'Othmān ibn eṣ-Ṣaffār, by Muḥammad ibn 'Alī as-Sahhāmi, and by other experts in the laws of succession, each one of whom affected to regard Ibn al-Labbān⁸⁰ as a mere learner and follower of his own, in all matters relating to the laws of inheritance, to wills and bequests, to astronomical calculations (?), and to the science of integration and compensation (al-Jabar wa 'l-Muḳābilah, i.e. Algebra). For a long period of time, the wazīrs had been in the habit of inviting these men to banquets and of rewarding them with presents, which were fruitlessly divided amongst them.

On our arrival at Zabīd I lodged the Jurist in the inner part of the house, so that none but myself should see him. At night I studied under him the laws of inheritance, and by day the reading of the noble Qur'ān, according to the teaching of Abu 'Amru ibn al-'Alā,⁸¹ the seven readings being one of the subjects upon which the Jurist gave instruction. I next devoted myself to the problem relating to the heirs of Ruzayḳ, until I was able to repeat all the particulars to myself by rote. I then presented myself to the Kā'id Surūr al-Fātiki, and asserted my ability to solve the problem. He was one of the persons most keenly desirous of making purchases from the estate, and he promised that if my assertions proved correct, he would give me a certain sum of money, the amount of which I have forgotten. Upon the statement being prepared, he brought forth the money and handed it over to the Jurist Abu Muḥammad ‘Abd Allah ibn al-Ḳāsim al-Abbār. Ibn al-Ḳāsim was at that time chief of the Shāfi‘ites at Zabīd, and it was under him that I studied the Shāfi‘ite doctrines. Surūr then assembled the Jurists in rooms, the floors of which were spread with fine sand, and each one sat down apart from the other, tracing his calculations in the sand. Whenever the amount of a share was substantiated, it was transferred from the sand to paper, until the division of the entire estate was completed and proved to be correct. Surūr never moved from the spot until he had divided the money among the Jurists, and he gave me a large share. I returned to my house and placed the gold before the Ḥadramauti Jurist. “I ask forgiveness of God, O my son,” he said, “for whosoever told me that he had beheld one hundred dinārs, I used to treat as a liar.” He then gave me the money, saying he had no use for it, since I provided him with all that he required. I took him with me, and he died (may God have mercy upon him), after having completed the pilgrimage. When the Abyssinians of Zabīd sought to kill me in the year 550, the Kā’id Surūr said unto them, “Is he not the person who solved the problem of the estate of Ruzayḳ? By Allah! he shall not be slain!”

Ruzayḳ was not skilled in military administration, neither was he possessed of experience in the management of public business. Ere long he resigned the office of wazīr, and Abu Maṣṣūr Muflīḥ al-Fātiki, who was then absent in the highlands, was called upon to fill his place.

WAZĪRATE OF MUFLĪḤ AL-FĀTIKI.

MUFLĪḤ belonged to an Abyssinian tribe known by the name of Ṣahrāt. He bore the surname of Abu Maṣṣūr (father of Maṣṣūr), the latter being the name of one of his sons. (Abu) Maṣṣūr was noted among the most distinguished of his contemporaries for his righteousness, and was remarkable also for his knowledge of affairs, for his skill as a Jurist, for his literary culture, for his handsome appearance, his bravery, his clemency, and for the perfection of his talents as a leader. People were in the habit of saying that, had his lineage been that of Quraysh, every condition required to fit him for the office of Khalīfah would have been combined in his person. The retainers of Fātik nicknamed him al-Baghl, the mule. He was called MuflīḤ al-Baghl, and he showed no displeasure nor anger thereat. I was told by his secretary, Ḥimyar ibn As'ad, that he was so named on account of a physical conformation, in which he resembled a mule.

He was distinguished for continence, and was never known to have been the prey of passion, either in his youth or in his mature age. Ḥimyar related in illustration of his master's self-control, that MuflīḤ, when holding the office of wazīr, sent for him one day, and complained that life had become a weariness unto him through the reports he continually heard respecting the singing of Wardah, the slave girl of the Amīr 'Othmān al-Ghuzzi, and the descriptions he received of her beauty. He was bent, he said, upon contriving means whereby she might be brought to him. "I answered," said Ḥimyar, "that if the wazīr sought her society for the satisfaction to his desires, my best faculties would be used in his service. 'By Allah!' he replied, 'I have never yet, since the day of my creation, allowed my passions to make me sin against God.' 'At what price,' I asked, 'will then the wazīr purchase her?' 'At whatever price her master demands,' he answered."

Her master was a distinguished leader, a man of high rank in the service of the state, greatly respected and considered. He was commander of the Ghuzz (Turkish or Northern soldiery), whom Jayyāsh had brought to the country to fight against Saba ibn Aḥmad the Sulayhite. 'Othmān was their leader and chief. They numbered four hundred mounted archers, and with their assistance the Abyssinian dynasty defended itself against the Arabs. The body of troops, as originally enlisted by Jayyāsh, numbered three thousand bows, but when two thousand marched from Mecca for Zabīd, Jayyāsh repented of his design, perceiving that they would drive him out of the country and seek to take possession of it. In anticipation of their arrival, he sent orders to the officers he had placed in command of the Ghuzz at Mecca, to cast poison into their food, into their drink, and into their raiment. A great number died, and only one thousand horsemen, or less, reached Zabīd. Jayyāsh sent five hundred to the highlands, and they conquered the districts trodden by the hoofs of their horses. When they reached the province of Ṣan'ā, Jayyāsh employed a person to spread death among them by poison. They were finally exterminated through the effects of war and of other calamities, and there remained with Jayyāsh in Tihāmah only four hundred and fifty horsemen. He made them a grant of a wide tract of land, extending to a valley (or river) known by the name of Dhu'āl, a district inhabited by the 'Akkites and Ash'arites. These lands occupied a width of one day's journey, and in length, from the mountains to the sea, a space of two days or less. They were distant one day's journey from Zabīd.⁸² The Ghuzz continued to collect the 78 revenues of the valley from the year 486 to 524. They were respected and increased in wealth, and ruled over the country. The chieftainship was lastly held by Shat (Suli?), by Ṭayṭās, and by 'Othmān the above mentioned. The former two died, and 'Othmān remained alone; but the number of the Ghuzz was now reduced to one hundred horsemen, all aged men. As to their children, born in Zabīd, they did not prosper. They had neither the strength of character that inspires fear, nor the benevolence that gives rise to hope.

The wazīr's secretary Sheykh Ḥimyar ibn As'ad, continuing his narrative, said that he reflected over the means whereby he might succeed in gratifying the wishes of the wazīr, and he found that of which he was in quest. Addressing Muflīḥ, he indicated the means whereby the old distribution of the lands could be annulled. The men, he said, whose services were formerly prized by the state, were now dead, and valuable grants of land had passed into the possession of their children, who were useless. He advised the wazīr to act in the matter with firmness, to order all holders of fiefs to leave their estates and assemble at Zabīd, and to transfer the owners to other districts. Upon that policy being carried into execution by the wazīr, it occasioned, said Ḥimyar, great hardship to the great officials of the government, but to none so great as to 'Othmān, for the property of those of his companions who had died, had passed into his possession.

“When he was about to depart from Zabīd with his people, and the matter on the point of being irretrievable settled, I went,” said Ḥimyar, “to his house. We drank together, and Wardah, as well as other slave girls, sang to him.”

None of the people of Tihāmāh were in the habit of secluding either their singers or the freed women, mothers of their children,⁸³ from Ibn Ḥimyar's presence, for most of their concubines and singers were supplied by him and educated in his house. He had served several of the highland kings, then he had come down to Tihāmah and occupied a confidential position under Aḥmad ibn Mas'ūd ibn Faraj al-Mu'taman (the Trusted), governor of Ḥays. After that he became secretary to Mann Allah al-Fātiki, and then to the Sheykh Abu Maṣṣūr Muflīḥ al-Fātiki. It was from this same Ḥimyar that the kings purchased the poison they used for destroying their enemies. He had brothers and uncles in the country of Bakīl and Hāshid, and the tree that produces the poison is grown exclusively on a farm attached to a building, one of their strongholds. The owners carefully preserve the plant, precisely as, in Egypt, that which produces balsam is tended, and they do so with even greater care. All the members of the dynasty of Najāḥ and all those of their wazīrs, who died (by poison), were victims to the drug supplied by Ḥimyar ibn As'ad.* People of rank, when in his society, used to say to him, "We eat and we drink, O Abu Sabā, and we are in your power," whereupon he would laugh and say, "Just so." He was quick with pleasant repartees, possessed a well-stored memory; he was witty, and moreover liberal in bestowing his substance in the service of God and in works of charity. He frequently acted as envoy between the Abyssinian Princes, he repaired breaches of friendship, and grave disputes became, in his hands, matter of easy settlement. He subsequently dwelt at al-Kadrā with the Kā'id Iṣḥāq ibn Marzūḳ as-Saḥrati (the Saḥratite), from whom he received a liberal welcome, and who took him into his confidence. He died at al-Kadrā in the year 553, at the age of upwards of seventy years. When he visited Zabīd, where he had no kinsfolk, he used to take up his abode with me and with other friends, and he was in consequence on terms of familiarity and unreserve with me.

Himyar, proceeding with his narrative, said, "When the wine began to produce its effects upon 'Othmān, he spoke to me as follows: 'I have longed,' he began, 'to meet you, being desirous of settling matters with that tyrannical slave Muffih, and of finding means to be left in peaceful possession of our fiefs and of our property, which we did not acquire in his days and for the possession of which we are not indebted to his liberality.' I answered that notwithstanding the wazīr's self-sufficiency and pride, he was in reality of a kind disposition and quick to turn back from harsh measures. I promised that on the following day, when Muffih returned from his morning visit to the King, I would, God willing, strive to prevail upon the wazīr to act indulgently. 'I know,' I continued, 'that if he eat at your table and drink of your wine, and if your slave girls sing to him, he will feel shame and will renounce his design.' 'Othmān was almost beside himself with joy, though he could not believe that the wazīr would visit him. I advised 80 him to come on the following night, uninvited, to the house of the wazīr, and to announce himself as a guest who desired to be honoured by being allowed to share in the pleasures of music and wine. On the following night, when 'Othmān came to us, I advised the wazīr to bring forth the singing girls and female cup-bearers. He did so, and he promised 'Othmān that he would, on the next day, be his guest. A large sum of money was that night by 'Othmān's orders brought to his house. On the following day, after the usual morning attendance at the Prince's palace, we rode to 'Othmān's place of abode. We found sumptuous banquets spread out (for the several classes of guests). For one party alone I counted thirty roasted sheep and thirty vessels of sweetmeats. The banquet at which the wazīr was seated, occupied the front of 'Othmān's garden, from one end to the other, a length of fifty cubits. The wazīr on beholding the sight was filled with envious anger against 'Othmān, for the arrogance he attributed to him and for the promptitude with which he was able to provide so splendid a feast, composed of four separate banquets. 'Othmān next distributed among the members of the wazīr's suite three buhārs of sweetmeats, a quantity equal to nine kaṭars (nine hundred pounds).^{*} We then withdrew to the wine-room, seven in number, [besides myself, the eighth. I acted as cup-bearer and contrived to produce intoxication in five members of our company, who soon withdrew].⁸⁴ Thereupon, addressing 'Othmān, I said: 'Truly thou art as one of a herd of cattle, deprived of sense. Thinkest thou that the wazīr hath visited thee for the sake of meat or drink? What hath happened to abridge thine understanding and to blind thine eyesight?' 'Instruct me then how to act,' he replied. I desired him to enumerate his possessions. He spoke of horses and accoutrements, camels and articles of curiosity and of value. I objected to all these things, and I affected to depreciate them. He begged me to advise him. I desired him, in reply, to think of a present such as would not be hidden away in a treasury, and which would never be out of the recipient's sight. 'What is wanted,' I added, 'is that the present should, whenever he sees it, remind him of you.' After consideration he said: 'I have nought else but Wardah, and she is dear to me as my soul. But if she be suitable, I will part with her, even though I die.' 'If the wazīr consent to accept of her,' I replied, 'she is such as will be a suitable present.' 'Speak then of her to the wazīr,' he answered, 'and if he accept her, I will reward thee with one thousand dinārs.'

"We then ordered Wardah to be brought into our presence, together with nine other slave girls. They kissed the wazīr's hand and commenced singing before him, with uncovered faces. I advised the wazīr to pay no heed to Wardah and to pretend admiration of the others. He did so, with the effect of stimulating her master's desire that he should accept of her. After a time 'Othmān became intoxicated and slept. The women likewise were overcome with wine, all but Wardah, who, I desired, should retain her faculties. I made use of a pretext to leave the room, and sending for Wardah, I informed her of the facts of the case. 'I have no desire,' she replied, 'but to my lord.' I then requested the wazīr to enter a sitting-room, in which I joined him along with Wardah. He flattered her with promises and coaxed her. I wanted to leave, but he stopped me, saying: 'By Allah, this shall not be.' We returned to the public room, and I swear that the wazīr did not even satiate his eyesight, nor did he allow the girl to kiss his hand when bidding farewell. When her master recovered, we took leave of him. It was near the latest hour for evening prayer, and before it had lapsed, Wardah stood before us. In the morning I went back to 'Othmān. I restored the thousand dinārs he had given me, and I questioned him touching a farm in the valley of Dhu'āl.⁸⁵ The wazīr sent for me in the evening and gave me a dress of honour. 'Your daughter Wardah,' he said, 'has sworn that I shall not approach her until I have satisfied you. What, therefore, will content you?' 'The lands of 'Abāda,' I replied, 'with all the contents of the farm, its growing crops and its cattle.' The wazīr ordered the lands to be conveyed to me; and they are a possession," added Ḥimyar, "which has the property of never occasioning loss to its proprietor."*

To return to the stories told of the wazīr Muḥliḥ. Among them is that related by the Sheykh Abu 'ṭ-Ṭāmi Jayyāsh, son of Isma'īl, son of Albūka. At an early period of the wazirate of the Sheykh and Kā'id Muḥliḥ, Abu 'l-Ma'āli ibn al Ḥabbāb arrived at Zabīd from Egypt. He purchased an Abyssinian slave to attend upon him. The Abyssinian escaped from his master [and attached himself to certain of the wazīr's dependants. Abu 'l-Ma'āli thereupon wrote to the wazīr] two lines of verse as follows:—⁸⁶

Thou art the cloud whose beneficent floods fertilize the outspread earth.—Its bounty, a fortuitous obstacle has withheld from me.

But if its ample and generous showers do not refresh me—Even so its consuming thunderbolts will not come near me.

Muḥliḥ, on reading the lines, perceived their veiled meaning, and he awoke to the merits of Abu 'l-Ma'āli. He sent for the youth and returned him to his master accompanied by a gift of four other slaves of the same nation. He invited Abu 'l-Ma'āli to his court and commanded him to compose a eulogistic ode. Abu 'l-Ma'āli obeyed, and recited it in the presence of the wazīr, who rewarded him with five hundred dinārs. Manṣūr son of Muḥliḥ gave him likewise three hundred dinārs for another ode written in his own praise, and he took him to Mecca, may God guard it.

I will now relate what occurred to Muḥliḥ with the soldiery. Certain men among the slaves of the

* I need perhaps hardly say that the combination of jingle and pun, which I have here endeavoured to imitate, is a thing much appreciated by Arab readers.

Honourable Lady the Queen, ('Alam) the mother of Fātik, were brought up in the palace of al-Fātik son of Maṣṣūr. Their names were Ṣawāb, Rayḥān, Yumn, ['Anbar?] and Rayḥān the elder. They were the leading personages, and holders of the highest rank in the state. Besides these there were certain powerful men, likewise educated in the palace, namely Iḳbāl, Maṣrūr (or Burḥān?), Bāriḥ (?) and Surūr. The last mentioned was the chief of both parties, the foremost in influence and in ability. These men spoke in the name of the Sulṭān. The wazīr, in all the affairs of the kingdom, became as a stranger among them, and by their aid, the authority of the Queen was greatly increased. They contrived also to attach to themselves a large portion of the troops, both horsemen and foot soldiers, and they began to concert measures for the expulsion of Muḥliḥ from Zabīd. Surūr advised them to address themselves to the wazīr on the subject of a pilgrimage, to be performed by the Queen to Mecca, and to ask him to provide her with a sum of thirty thousand dinārs for her expenses. On application 83 being made to the wazīr, he refused, saying that the money could be spent more worthily on the defence of the state against its enemies than in the indulgence of such foolish whims. "Our Lady," he added, "has ample occupation with her spindle and distaff and in the privacy of her own house." They continued to press the matter upon him until he exclaimed: "Our Lady wants a totally different thing! See that ye find it for her and it will satisfy her." "What then does she want?" they asked. Muḥliḥ's reply and the gesture by which it was accompanied, caused such deep offence, that he could repair the evil only by consenting to the Lady's pilgrimage, by supplying her with the thirty thousand dinārs and by sending his son Maṣṣūr to accompany her to Mecca.

In pursuance of his purpose for the expulsion of Muḥliḥ, Surūr then sent the wazīr to Aden, to make war upon Sabā son of Abu Su'ūd and upon 'Aly son of Abu 'l-Gharāt, the Zuray'ites. When he had reached the distance of a night's journey from Zabīd, Muḥammad son of Fātik son of Jayyāsh suddenly rose in rebellion against the Queen and her son, and thereby obliged Muḥliḥ to return.

Surūr then sought to bring about the departure of Muḥliḥ by writing to the Arab tribes of Zi'l and 'Imrān to join in the invasion of the district of al-Mahjam, then occupied by the Kā'id Mas'ūd the Zaydite.* Muḥliḥ was thereby compelled to start for al-Mahjam, a distance from Zabīd of three days' journey. He had not accomplished more than one night's journey, when his troops secretly deserted him and returned to the city. He was left with only his personal dependants and marched with them to the mountains of Burā'. He took possession of the fortress of al-Mukarrishah (al-Karish?)⁸⁷ and he attacked Tihāmah, harrassing it with raids, in the early morning and late at eve, whilst the retainers of Fātik attacked him in his encampments. Then leaving his women in the fortress, he joined the Arabs of al-Mahjam, members of the tribes of 84 Mash'al, 'Imrān and Zi'l, accomplished and valiant horsemen. They gave him, as place of residence, a fortress which belonged to them, situated at a distance from al-Mahjam of half a day's journey or less, known by the name of Dabsān. Muḥliḥ despatched depredating parties into the territories of al-Mahjam, and he entered into correspondence with the Amīr and Sharīf Ghānim son of Yahya the Suleymānite and Hasanite, who then ruled over the province of Ibn Ṭarf.⁸⁸ Muḥliḥ entered into a pledge with the Sharīf and his kinsmen to abolish the tribute they rendered to the Prince of Zabīd, for which Ghānim was yearly liable and which amounted to sixty thousand dinārs. He also engaged to add to their territories the wide district of al-Wādiyāni. The Sharīf marched with one thousand horsemen and ten thousand infantry, to the aid of Mufliḥ against the people of Zabīd. The allies were encountered by the Kā'id Surūr, who defeated Mufliḥ, the Sharīfs and the Arabs, near al-Mahjam. Whilst Surūr was at that place, he received from Zabīd a deed of investiture, granting him the territories and dependencies of al-Mahjam, consisting of Maur and al-Wādiyāni. Surūr established his residence in the province, and Mufliḥ returned to the fortress of al-Karish, where he died in the year 529.*

* Or, according to Khazraji, Surūr al-Kurandi.

His son Maṣṣūr succeeded him and continued the war with his father's enemies, making them taste of its calamities in many forms. But after a time his followers began to desert him, and their numbers gradually diminished. They were wearied with the sufferings of war and with separation from their homes.

Maṣṣūr surrendered [himself to the Kā'id Surūr, claiming his protection, and accompanied him to Zabīd, where Iḳbāl was then wazīr. The young Amīr received a dress of honour] and his father's house was given him as a place of residence. On the following morning he was seized, and at night he was slain in the house of the wazīr Iḳbāl. The King Fātik [and the Kā'id Surūr] denounced the act, and the King meditated putting Iḳbāl to death, but he resolved to spare his life for a time. I was told by Ḥimyar ibn As'ad, that a messenger from the wazīr Iḳbāl bought poison of him. For whom it was destined, Ḥimyar swore he knew not. Iḳbāl, by ingratiating himself with the Prince, succeeded in administering the poison to his master Fātik son of the Lady 'Alam, and the Prince died in the month of Sha'bān [A.H. 531].⁸⁹

Wardah, the slave girl of the wazīr Muflīḥ, relates 85 that when her master died in the highlands, at the castle named al-Karish, or al-Mukarrishah, she was asked in marriage by the wazīr Iḳbāl, by the Kā'id Surūr, by the Kā'id Ishāḳ ibn Marzūk and by the Kā'id 'Aly ibn Mas'ūd, Prince of Ḥays. "I made flattering promises to the messenger of each," she said, "but I consulted on the subject my lord Maṣṣūr son of Muflīḥ. He indicated his preference for Surūr, but recommended me to seek advice of Ḥimyar ibn As'ad. I accordingly sent for him to Tihāmah. 'As for 'Aly ibn Mas'ūd,' said Ḥimyar, 'he has ninety concubines and four wives. As for Iḳbāl, he has twenty singing girls; he has moreover Nājiyah, who has been carefully educated by the slave dealers, and the love he bears her son Maṣṣūr is carried to an extreme. As for the Kā'id Ishāḳ ibn Marzūk, he has the daughter of 'Uwayd, mother of his son Faraj, and also Uḥdūla, the daughter of his uncle. By Allah, none equal to her treads the ground of Tihāmah. I recommend to you the Kā'id Abu Muḥammad Surūr al-Fātiki. He is a man of a prudent disposition, and he was reared by the King Fātik son of Maṣṣūr (by Maṣṣūr?) and by our Lady the mother of Fātik.' I was married," continued Wardah, "to the Kā'id Abu Muḥammad Surūr al-Fātiki. I found him to be one whose thoughts were diverted from the world, from the society of women and from pleasure, by his absorption in affairs of supreme importance. But ere long I made him feel his dependence upon me. I contrived to make myself his intimate companion, and I finally obtained complete ascendancy over him. With all his roughness and severity of character, and the shrinking fear with which his female slaves regarded him, he never opposed my wishes, and if I happened to be displeased with him, he seemed as if about to part with his life."

An illustration of the above is to be found in an anecdote related by Sheykh Muslim ibn Yashjub, wazīr of the Prince and Sharīf Ghānim son of Yahya the Ḥasanite. "I came," he said, "from my country as an envoy to Surūr al-Fātiki, to negotiate a truce between ourselves and him. His wazīr 'Obayd ibn Baḥr said to me: 'Would that thine arrival had happened either sooner or later! Thou hast come to the Kā'id at a moment when his mind is greatly disturbed.' I waited two or three days without being able to see the Prince, but then 86 Himyar ibn As'ad arrived. 'Now,' said 'Obayd ibn Baḥr, 'Himyar having come, the knot that caused thy trouble is unloosed!' 'How is that?' I inquired. 'Wardah, mother of 'Amru,' he answered, 'is angry with the Kā'id, and has sworn that she will not speak to him nor allow him to approach her, until her father shall come to her'—meaning thereby Sheykh Himyar ibn As'ad. That same night," continued Muslim, "we were invited to an assembly, for which were prepared wine and music and perfumes. We had hardly sat down, when the Kā'id approached and we saluted him. We then heard behind a curtain a confused sound of voices and a jingling of gold ornaments, such as never was before. And behold it was Wardah, who, a reconciliation having been effected by Himyar between her and her master, now came to sing to him. An unfavourable impression was produced upon me by the sight of the helplessness and weakness of Surūr. He seemed to guess what was passing in my mind, and he recited the words of the poet:—

We are a people whom a woman's large and lustrous eyes will melt—And we are men to whom iron must yield."

Among the slaves of Fātik was he with the mention of whom I conclude this account of the Abyssinian dynasty, and whose mention I have postponed to the last, although in order of merit he unquestionably ranks first. He of whom I speak was the noble Kā'id Abu Muḥammad Surūr Amḥarah al-Fātiki. He belonged to the Abyssinian tribe of Amḥarah, and all I can relate of him is but as a drop in the sea of his great merits.

Of his early history it may be recorded that Maṣṣūr ibn Fātik, having slain the wazīr Anīs, purchased from his estate the Honourable and pious Lady, the Pilgrim and Lady of Zabīd, by whom he had a son, whom he named Fātik ibn Maṣṣūr. She bought for her son certain young Abyssinian slaves, of whom Surūr was one. He was brought up under her immediate care, and ere long, as he advanced in years, he became distinguished for his superior merits and great qualities. She placed him in charge of the Mamlūks, and appointed him chief over all who abode in the palace. He became ruler and director, with the power of showing indulgence and of exercising severity. He was next appointed to the command of a division of the army, and he won popularity among the troops by his kindness and indulgence. He continued to advance in dignity, and became the intermediary between the 87 principal wazīrs and the Sulṭān, who thenceforward dispensed with the services of the stewards of the palace. The Chief Steward at that time was the Sheykh Ṣawāb, a religious man, who devoted himself exclusively to the worship of God. Whenever he was reproached for his disregard of what had occurred, he would answer that the Kā'id Abu Muḥammad Surūr was the authorized holder of the right to command and to forbid, over himself, over his censors, and over the Queen herself, and that in no wise should Surūr's authority be curtailed, he being the most worthy to direct the affairs of the people, to reward and to punish, to bind and to loose. Surūr continued to advance in power and dignity. He eventually succeeded in driving Muffih out of Zabīd, and he made war upon him until his adversary died in the highlands, after prolonged fighting, in which large numbers of men perished on both sides. The final result was the triumph of Surūr, and he became possessed of supreme authority.

It has been related to me by Sheykh 'Abd al-Muhsin ibn Isma'il, secretary of the Kā'id Surūr, that he remembered the occasion when the Amīr and Sharif Ghānim, son of Yahya the Hasanite, marched to the assistance of Muffih. "Ghānim," he said, "had a thousand horsemen and ten thousand infantry, all of whom combined with the troops of Muffih. They were joined also by certain Arabs, in great numbers, by the Banu Mash'al, men who spent their lives in the saddle and who were the champions of their age, by the Banu 'Imrān, the Banu Zi'l, the Banu Ḥarām and the Ḥakamites.⁹⁰ All gathered together into one body and advanced against us. Our troops were few in number, and the Kā'id Surūr had written to the people of Zabīd for re-inforcements. The battle was fought at al-Mahjam, which is three days' journey from Zabīd." 'Abd al-Muhsin said he pointed out to Surūr, that to attack these people would surely be rashness, his forces being in comparison to theirs as a drop in the sea, or as a morsel between the jaws of a ravenous animal. "Be silent," answered Surūr, "for, by Allah, death will be lighter unto me than 88 defeat." The two armies engaged, and the fortunes of the day went against Muffih and Ghānim and their allies. Thenceforward conviction of the high destinies reserved for Surūr acquired double strength in the minds both of his friends and of his opponents.

It was previous to these events that Muffih started from Zabīd for Aden, and that when he had reached the distance of half a day's journey, Muḥammad son of Fātik son of Jayyāsh, seeing the town denuded of troops, rose in insurrection, and gained possession of the Government House. The Qur'ān readers came into his presence and the people of the city flocked unto him, offering their congratulations. His wazīr was Maṣṣūr son of Mann Allah al-Fātiki. The Queen took refuge, along with her son, in the upper apartments of the palace. The news was brought to the Kā'id Surūr, who commanded the rearguard of the army. He turned back, and having scaled the walls, he entered the town. He proceeded to the back of the Government House, and calling to his mistress, he made himself known unto her, and desired her servants to let down a rope for him. The eunuchs and women pulled him up with ropes, and entering into the presence of his mistress, he saluted her and quieted her fears. His troops, he told her, were following him. Having selected one hundred slavegirls and fifty eunuchs, he habited them in the garb of men and supplied them with armour and weapons. The casements were then thrown open, and the women and eunuchs cried aloud with one voice: Fātik son of Maṣṣūr! Muḥammad son of Fātik was at that moment occupying a raised seat below the windows of the palace. The Kā'id cast a stone which unerringly hit the mark, and striking Muḥammad ibn Fātik, bruised his face at the same instant of time when the cry was uttered. He, the wazīrs and their followers instantly fled, and in the evening they left the city by one of its gates. The soldiers did not reach Zabīd until noon of the following day. These were some of the circumstances which necessarily operated to bring about Surūr's advancement over all other members of the government.

He next acquired rule over al-Mahjam, a royal seat of government. The Arabs, the Banu 'Imrān, 89 the Banu Zi'l and the Ḥakamites, dispersed themselves, and the Amīr Ghānim ibn Yaḥya the Ḥasanite, whose dynasty has acquired great renown, separated himself from his allies.

The Kā'id Surūr used to inhabit Zabīd from the beginning of Dhu 'l-Ḳa'dah (the eleventh month) until the end of Sha'bān (the eighth). Then he would leave Zabīd and spend Ramaḍān at al-Mahjam, occupying himself with the affairs of his province. His expenditure and charities in the month of Ramaḍān, amounted to a large sum. Sheykh 'Obayd ibn Baḥr, his wazīr, informed me that the allowances for his kitchen expenses, in the month of Ramaḍān, amounted to one thousand dinārs a day. I witnessed for several years the ceremonial attending his entrance into Zabīd. The people, on his arrival from al-Mahjam, used to go forth from the city in crowds to meet him. They divided themselves into classes and stood on a lofty hill awaiting his arrival. The first to salute him were the Jurists of the Mālikite, the Ḥanafite and the Shāfi'ite schools. The Prince used to dismount in token of respect, a thing he did for no other class. They were followed by the merchants, after whose departure the soldiery came forth in crowds. On entering the city, after saluting and paying due honour to the Sultān, he proceeded to the palace of the Honourable Lady his mistress. On his entering, all who were present, young and old, withdrew, with the exception only of the Lady's slave girl Ghazāl, who was his wife's sister, and of two slave girls formerly belonging to her Lord Maṣṣūr ibn Fātik. These women conducted themselves according to her pious example and imitated her in her good works. On his approach, the Princess would rise from her seat in token of welcome and of respect for his exalted rank, and she would say unto him : “Thou, O Abu Muḥammad, art not simply our wazīr, but our master and the manly ruler of the kingdom, one whose authority it is not in aught lawful unto us to disregard.”⁹¹ He would weep aloud in her presence and bend down his face to the dust, until she would raise him from the ground with her own hands. The women would then withdraw to a short distance at the end of the saloon, whilst he reported to her the measures he desired to be put into execution that year, appointments, supersessions, rewards and sentences of death. He would remain seated before the Princess,⁹² with the 90 three women standing near him, until he arose for midday prayer. He used to repair for the purpose to his mosque, which stood close to the gates of his palace. It was then impossible to follow him on account of the crowds that surrounded him, composed of people who had been unable to go forth from the city to meet him on his arrival.

A PARAGRAPH DESCRIBING WHAT I HAVE SEEN IN THE HANDWRITING OF HIS SECRETARIES.

I have seen a list of the gratifications which Surūr was in the habit of conferring, on his arrival at Zabīd, upon the Jurists, Kādis, and upon the most distinguished scholars, learned in the traditions, in grammar, glossology, theology, and jurisprudence. The whole amounted each year to twelve thousand dinārs, besides gratuities to the military classes, notwithstanding their great numbers.

I have been told by ‘Obayd ibn Baḥr and others, that the presents he made each year to the Sulṭān’s officials, to the King’s nobles, stewards and personal retainers, amounted to twenty thousand dinārs, in addition to the fixed emoluments of each person’s office. Others have told me that the sums transferred from his province to the public treasury of the King, amounted each year to sixty thousand dinārs, and that he used to pay over to the household of his mistress the Princess, to her retainers and companions and to the persons under her protection, in the form of presents, fifteen thousand dinārs.

ANOTHER PARAGRAPH.—The Kā'id Abu Muḥammad Surūr al-Fātiki—May God have mercy upon him!—was in the habit of going forth unto his mosque, after the expiration of half or one third of the night. He was better acquainted than any other person with the places of abode and habitations of the principal people. He used to say that he went forth at that hour, lest any persons spending their nights in anxiety or grief, or others devoted to religious practices, were unable to come into his presence by day, either on account of the crowd or by reason of their bashfulness. After morning prayer he used to go either on a visit to a Jurist, to the bedside of some sick person, to a house where there was mourning for the dead, to a feast or to a wedding. He did not confine his visits to the great military chiefs, to the learned and to merchants, and neglect those of a humbler rank. Who-soever, on the contrary, appealed to him was attended to. People who believed themselves to be oppressed came into his presence, and stated their case in bold and even in unseemly language. Such a person was safe from all danger of awakening his sense of dignity and pride, or of provoking his anger. If sent for by the Judges, he attended in person, not deputing another to take his place [as is done by men puffed up with pride, even though of inferior rank]. He would seat himself opposite the Judge in token of respect, and in testimony of his willing obedience to the ordinances of divine law. [On returning to the palace, after accompanying the Sulṭān's procession, he would enter, and after rendering obeisance, he would stop at the royal gate, where he dispensed justice to the people with perfect judgment. (Next he would occupy himself in the transaction of military) business, and at the hour of the midday meal, he returned to his house. There he would rest until the sun began to decline, when he would proceed to the mosque.]⁹³ From that time until the hour of afternoon prayer, he occupied himself exclusively in hearing the authentic traditions of the Apostle of God, whom God bless and hail with salutations of peace! He would then withdraw to his palace, but before sunset he would come forth to the mosque, and after sunset prayer, the Jurists would engage in debates before him until the end of the latest hour for evening prayer, sometimes, however, prolonging their discussions to a later hour. He used then, riding an ass and with only one servant before him, to proceed to the palace of the Queen, to take counsel with her upon public affairs.

Such was his mode of life from the year 529 until he was slain in his mosque at Zabīd (May God be merciful unto him!), whilst performing the third prostrations of afternoon prayer, on Friday the 12th of Rajab [A.H. 551]. He was killed by a man of the name of Mujrim, one of the followers of ‘Aly ibn Mahdy. The murderer was put to death that same evening, after killing several persons.⁹⁴ The Abyssinian dynasty did not long endure after the death of Surūr. It was subverted by ‘Aly ibn Mahdy, who conquered Zabīd and its dependencies, in the year 554.

⁹² I will now proceed with an account of ‘Aly ibn Mahdy in Yaman. In that chapter I will set forth a summary comprising the outset and the close of his career.

THE INSURRECTION OF 'ALY IBN MAHDY IN YAMAN.

As to his lineage, he was a descendant of Ḥimyar, and his name was 'Aly ibn Mahdy, native of a village named al-'Anbarah, situated on the coast near Zabīd. His father was a virtuous and pure-hearted man, whose son 'Aly was brought up in his religious tenets and followed his examples, in his devotion to religious exercises and to the practice of good works. After a time 'Aly went on the pilgrimage and visited the holy places. He met the pilgrims, the doctors and preachers of 'Irāk, and he became filled with the knowledge they imparted to him. On his return to Yaman he led a life of retirement, but he exhorted the people, warning them against association with the soldiery.* He was an eloquent man, of prepossessing appearance, dark complexioned, with sunken cheeks, bearded, tall, of a spare figure, and marked between his eyes with the traces of his prostrations.⁹⁵ He had an agreeable voice, which he skilfully modulated in chanting, and a winning manner of imparting instruction. He possessed a well-stored memory, was constant in exhorting, and in expounding the Qur'an and the teaching of the Sūfis. He used to speak of things that were reserved to him in the future, and the accurate fulfilment of his predictions became one of the most powerful means by which he won the hearts of the people.

His career commenced on the coast of Zabīd, in the village of al-'Anbarah, in that of Wāsīt, that of Ḳuḍayb, at al-Ahwāb, al-Mu'tafī (?) and the shores of al-Farah (al-'Ārah?). He used to journey thence, and the respect in which he was held ever increased with the lapse of time. I had at that period devoted myself to him, and for the space of a year I was in almost constant attendance upon him. But my father heard that I had abandoned the study of Jurisprudence and that I had given myself up to a religious life. He came from his home, took me from the society of 'Aly Mahdy and replaced me at the college of Zabīd. I used to visit 'Aly Mahdy once every month, but when his 93 power waxed great throughout the country, I detached myself from him, out of fear of the people of Zabīd. From the year 531 until 536, he continued to preach to the people in the open plains, and on the approach of the pilgrimage season he used to go forth to Mecca, mounted on a dromedary. The Lady, the mother of Fātik son of Manṣūr, then relieved him, his brethren, his kindred and those under his protection, from payment of the assessment (kharāj) on their lands. In a brief period of time they became prosperous and rich, they rode horses and were such as are described by the poet al-Mutanabby:—

It seemed as though their horses were foaled beneath them—
And as though the riders were born mounted upon their horses' backs.⁹⁶

Certain persons, inhabitants of the highlands, were brought to 'Aly ibn Mahdy and an alliance sworn between them. He went to these people in the year 538 and assembled an army, which attained the number of forty thousand men, wherewith he marched to attack the city of al-Kadrā. He was met by the Kā'id Ishāk ibn Marzūk as-Saḥrati at the head of his people. Ibn Mahdy's army was defeated. Many of his people were killed, but the greater number were spared. He returned to the highlands, where he remained until the year 541. He then wrote to the Queen at Zabīd and asked protection for himself and for his followers, and permission to return to his country. Notwithstanding the disapproval of the officials of her government and of the Jurists of her time, she granted his request, *that God should (thereby) accomplish the things that were ordained. 'Aly ibn Mahdy applied himself for several years to the cultivation of his property, which he held free of all assessment, and he thus amassed considerable wealth. When preaching he used to say: "O ye people, the time approacheth. The event draweth nigh! Almost ye may behold with your own eyes the things I have foretold unto you."

The Queen died in the year 545, and hardly had that event occurred, when 'Aly Mahdy appeared in the highlands, at a place named ad-Dāshir, subject to the Khaulānites [where he remained for a time].⁹⁷ Thence he ascended to a fortress named ash-Sharaf, which belonged to a tribe of the sept of Khaulān known by the name of Banu Ḥaywan (Ḥaydan?), a word which is pronounced with a ⁹⁴ quiescent y. These people he surnamed (in imitation of the Prophet) al-Anṣār (the Auxiliaries), and those who had accompanied him from the low country, he distinguished by the title al-Muhājirūn, (the Emigrants). But he then began to mistrust all his companions and to fear for his own safety. He appointed over the Anṣār a Khaulānite of the name of Saba ibn Yūsuf, to whom he gave the title of Sheykh al-Islām, and over the Muhājirūn a man [of the tribe of 'Imrān], named an-Nūby, who received the same title. He appointed them to be chiefs over the two parties, and none but these two persons was allowed to speak to him, or even to approach him. At times he secluded himself even from them, and they would organize military expeditions into the neighbouring country, on their own authority. This they continued to do, and to harass the people of Tihāmah with raids, both in the early mornings and late at eve, until the country bordering upon the highlands was utterly ruined. The Abyssinians at that time sent liberal supplies to their military stations, but their troops were unable to cope with their enemy for several reasons. Among others, because ash-Sharaf, besides being defended by large numbers of Khaulānites, was in itself an exceedingly strong fortress. Also, because a person desiring to reach the stronghold had to perform a day's journey, or part of a day's journey, through a narrow valley enclosed between two mountains. On reaching the foot of that upon which the fortress stood, the traveller had to ascend a torrent for half a day, ere he could attain the summit. Another reason was, that the torrent which occupied the valley flowed past great gorges, commencing near the low country, in which armies, with large quantities of stores and baggage, might lie hidden for a month before their presence could be suspected. Ibn Mahdy's raiders, when they entered a district in the low country, plundered and burnt, and on daylight appearing, they withdrew to the valley in which were these gorges. There they remained, where none could reach them or venture to attack them.

95 Thus he continued to act with the people of Zabīd, until the country was forsaken by its inhabitants. The land ceased to be ploughed, and the roads were deserted. His orders to his people were, to drive away the cattle and slaves, and to kill the prisoners and animals incapable of marching. They obeyed his commands, which stimulated their own greed, struck terror into their enemies, and accomplished the ruin of the country.

I met 'Alī ibn Mahdy in A.H. 549, at the Court of the Dā'y Muḥammad ibn Saba Prince of Aden, in the city of Dhu Jiblah. He was seeking aid against the people of Zabīd, which the Dā'y, however, would not consent to give. Ibn Mahdy tendered me his friendship and offered to place me at the head of all his followers.

On his return that same year from Dhu Jiblah to ash-Sharaf, he occupied himself in contriving the death of the Kā'id Surūr al-Fātiki. The Kā'id was slain in Rajab of the year 551. Among the causes that contributed to the success of Ibn Mahdy against the people of Zabīd, was the circumstance that their chiefs were filled with jealousy and envy, at the sight of the eminence attained by the Kā'id Surūr. After his death, the closed gates of evil were thrown open against the Abyssinian dynasty, and the bonds of its stability were unloosed. Ibn Mahdy left the fortress of ash-Sharaf and came down to ad-Dāshir, distant less than half a day's journey from Zabīd. The people and Arabs of the district, subjects of the Abyssinians, strove to conciliate him. And whenever one of Ibn Mahdy's people came in contact with a brother or a kinsman, living among the Abyssinians, a tiller of the soil, or a camel driver or cattle-herd in their service, he perverted him.

Thus matters continued until Ibn Mahdy penetrated, with an innumerable host, to the gates of Zabīd. I have been assured by several natives of Yaman, who witnessed the siege of the town, that no people ever withstood their enemies with so much firmness, or fought so bravely as the citizens of Zabīd. They fought Ibn Mahdy in seventy-two 96 engagements, heedless of the slaughter by which their numbers were reduced. They suffered from hunger until their misery constrained them to the necessity of eating carrion. They at length implored assistance of the Zaydite and Rassite Sharīf Aḥmad ibn Suleymān, Prince of Sa'dah. He gave them aid, impelled thereto by his eagerness to acquire sovereign power over the city and people. They pledged themselves to appoint him their King, and the Sharīf promised that if they slew their Lord Fātik, he would bind himself unto them by oath. The slaves thereupon rose against their master.

(They were the slaves of Fātik) son of Jayyāsh son of Najāh. This Najāh was the freedman of Marjān, who was the freedman of Abu ‘Abd Allah al-Ḥusayn ibn Salāmah, and Ḥusayn ibn Salāmah was the freedman of Rushd the steward, who was the freedman of Ziyād son of Ibrāhīm son of Abu ‘l-Jaysh Ishāk son of Muḥammad son of Ibrāhīm son of ‘Abdallah (son of Muḥammad) ibn Ziyād.⁹³

The slaves above mentioned slew Fātik in the year 553. But the Sharīf found himself unable to defend the people of Zabīd against ‘Aly ibn Mahdy. The war continued between them and Ibn Mahdy. Several battles were fought and the citizens sheltered themselves behind their walls, but he at length succeeded in capturing the town. The Abyssinian dynasty came to an end and Ibn Mahdy established himself in the Government House, on Friday the 14th of Rajab of the year 554.

‘Aly ibn Mahdy survived the event through the remainder of that month and throughout Sha‘bān and Ramaḍān. He died in the following month of Shawwāl. He held possession of the city for two months and twenty-one days. He was succeeded by his son al-Mahdy and next by his son ‘Abd an-Naby. The latter was deposed, and was replaced by ‘Aly ibn Mahdy’s son ‘Abd Allah, but he was afterwards re-instated, and at the present day he is ruler of the whole of Yaman, with the exception only of Aden, whose people have entered into a treaty with him, under the conditions of which they pay him an annual tribute.

‘Abd an-Naby is sovereign both of the Highlands and Lowlands, and all the kingdoms and treasures of the Kings of Yaman have passed into his hands. Muḥammad ibn 'Aly, a citizen of Dhu Jiblah, has 97 informed me that the riches of twenty-five Yamanite dynasties have been absorbed into the treasury of Ibn Mahdy. Therein is included the wealth of the nobles of Zabīd. None of the slaves of Fatik, the Princesses of his family or the nobles of his dynasty died, but left a large amount of wealth including great sums of money. [All was acquired by Ibn Mahdy]; for he became possessed of their children and women, who revealed to him where their masters' treasures were to be found, their gold and silver ware and ornaments, their pearls, jewels, precious stones and splendid apparel of all kinds. These nobles were as they of whom God Most High hath said: *How much they have left! Gardens and springs of water, corn-lands and splendid places of abode and wealth, wherein they spent a life of enjoyment! Thus have we dealt with them, and we have made these things to be an heritage unto another people.

The dynasty of Ibn Mahdy acquired the kingdom of the Suleymanite Sharīfs, that of the Banu Wa'il Sulṭāns of Wuhāzah, a ruling family of ancient and noble race, likewise the fortresses of the surviving members of the Sulayhite family, unto each of whose strongholds a wide extent of territory and large revenues were attached. As to the possessions of the King Maṣṣūr son of al-Mufaddal son of Abu 'l-Barakāt son of al-Walīd, the Himyarite, he lost all his strongholds, which it is unnecessary to enumerate, also all his treasures, in which were comprised those of the Dā'y 'Aly son of Muḥammad the Sulayhite, those of al-Mukarram Aḥmad son of 'Aly, husband of the Honourable Lady the

* Kur. ṣ. xliv. v. 25-27:

Queen Sayyidah, and those of the Queen herself. The whole of her predecessors' wealth became the property of the Lady Sayyidah. She deposited it in the fortress of Ta'kar, and al-Mufaddal ibn Abi'l-Barakāt gained possession of the castle and of its contents. They were inherited by his son Manṣūr ibn al-Mufaddal. For it is believed that Manṣūr reigned for thirty years and that he died in the decade of his hundredth or of his ninetieth year.⁹⁹

Among other places that passed into the possession of Ibn Mahdy, were the fortresses of al-Majma'ah and of Ta'kar, including, it is said, the wealth they contained; also the city of Dhu Jiblah, the chief centre for the propagation of the Fāṭimite supremacy and capital of the Sulayḥites, likewise the city of al-Janad and its dependencies, and in like manner Thālithah and Sharyāk, and Dhakhir together with its dependencies. And the possessions of that chieftain, 'Aly ibn Muḥammad Prince of Dhakhir, were not inferior to those of Manṣūr ibn al-Mufaddal. Ibn Mahdy next acquired the kingdom of the Banu 'z-Zarr and the cities of Dhu Jiblah, of Dhu Ashrak and of Ibb, the fortresses and country of the Banu Khaulān, the fortresses of the Banu Rabī'ah, namely 'Azzan, Ḥabb and ash-Shamākhi. He captured Sultān Abu 'n-Nurayn Abu 'l Fath, and the fortress of as-Sawā remained in the possession of Ibn as-Sabā'i (the Khaulānite). Ibn Mahdy next conquered the strongholds of the Dā'y 'Imrān ibn Muḥammad, that is to say, the fortresses of Sāmi' and Maṭrān [and Numayr] situated in the district of al-Ma'āfir. He became possessed also of the chief stronghold of Yaman, that which has no equals other than Ta'kar and Ḥabb, that is to say, the fortress of Samadān, the strength of which has become proverbial. No created being can prevail against that stronghold, unless aided by the executors of the Creator's decrees. This enumeration is that which I have styled a drop from the ocean of Ibn Mahdy's conquests. And in the foregoing I have not mentioned the country of the Banu Muẓaffar, Saba son of Aḥmad the Ṣulayḥite, nor the districts of Ḥarān (Ḥaraz?), nor Bura', nor the country of Bakīl, nor that of Ḥāshid, nor Jublah (Jublān Raymah?) with its fortresses and provinces, nor Wādi 'Unnah nor Wādi Zabīd, nor other places, such as the valleys of Rim'a and of Raymat al-Ashā'ir, their castles and their villages, Mudhaykhirah and its dependencies, which are several days' journey in extent, Damt and Wādi Taḥlah (Nakhlah?).¹⁰⁰

Now, as to the sect to which Ibn Mahdy belonged and the doctrines he held; he followed the rules of the Ḥanafite school in the interpretation of religious law, but he added to its fundamental articles of faith, the doctrine that regards sin as infidelity and punishable with death. He held in like manner that the penalty of death was to be inflicted upon all professing Muslims who opposed his teaching, that it was lawful to reduce their captured women to the condition of concubines, their children to slavery, and to treat their country as a land of infidels (Dār al-Ḥarb). I have been told, but the responsibility for truth rests upon the original narrator, that Ibn Mahdy did not implicitly trust the faith of a Muhājir, excepting he proved his sincerity by slaying his own son or his father or his brother. He used to recite the following passage:—*Thou shalt not find people who believe in God and in the Day of Judgment, bearing love unto them that oppose God and His apostle, even though such be their fathers, their sons, their brethren or their kinsfolk. He hath inscribed faith in the hearts (of the true believers), and He aideth them with a Spirit proceeding from Himself. I knew (added the narrator?) a youth among them, who was my neighbour and a student of Jurisprudence. His mother went on a visit to him and he slew her.

As to the faith which his followers placed in him, it was beyond what is commonly held in respect of the Prophets, the blessings of God and His peace be upon them. One of the family of Ibn Mahdy might think fit to kill several of his soldiers, and even though (the latter's comrades were ?) able to prevail against the slayer, they abstained, through submission and religious conviction, from killing him. If Ibn Mahdy were moved to anger against one of their greatest chiefs or leaders, the person who had incurred his displeasure would confine himself to a spot exposed to the rays of the sun. He would neither be fed nor given to drink, neither his son nor his wife could approach him, nor durst any person intercede for him, until Ibn Mahdy pardoned him of his own free will. Their perfect submission was such that every man carried to the public Treasury the woollen yarn which his wife or daughters had spun. Ibn Mahdy supplied him and his family with clothing. Not one of the soldiers possessed a horse his own property, or could keep one in a stable attached to his dwelling, neither did he possess accoutrements, or weapons, or aught else. Horses were kept in Ibn Mahdy's stables, and arms were stored in his arsenals. If necessity arose, he distributed among his men the horses and weapons they required. A soldier who fled from the enemy was beheaded. By no means could his life be spared. Whoso drank intoxicating liquors suffered death, and death was the penalty for listening to songs, for adultery, and for absence from the Fridays' prayers or from the two assemblies at which he preached to the people, on Thursdays and Mondays. Anyone who neglected to visit his father's grave on these two days suffered death. To these laws the soldiery alone were subject.

Those applicable to the people were of a more lenient character, and I am informed at the present time, that is to say, in the year 553 (read 563 or 564), that the severity with which these laws were carried into effect has been relaxed.¹⁰¹

CHAPTER IN WHICH ARE ENUMERATED THE PERSONS WHO HAVE HELD IN YAMAN THE OFFICE OF DĀ'Y FOR THE FĀṬIMITES.

OF their number was the Dā'y 'Aly son of Muḥammad the Ṣulayḥite, who combined the office of Dā'y with supreme power as temporal sovereign. Next was his son al-Mukarram Aḥmad the Ṣulayḥite, who likewise combined both offices. After him Sultān Suleymān az-Zawāḥi exercised the functions of Dā'y, but did not hold sovereign rule. Then the Kādi * ibn Mālik the Ṣulayḥite combined the office of Dā'y with that of Judge, but did not exercise sovereign rule. Next 'Aly son of Ibrahīm al-Muwaffaḥ fi 'd-dīn, son of Najīb ad-Daulah, held the office of Dā'y and exercised sovereign rule, under the authority of the Honourable Lady Queen Sayyidah, over part of her dominions.¹⁰²

Then, when the official notification was received from our Lord the Imām al-Āmir bi-Aḥkam Illah, Prince of the faithful—upon whom be peace—bringing to the Queen, his accepted Representative in the country of Yaman, the glad tidings of the birth of his son, our Lord the Imām at-Ṭayyib Abu 'l-Kāsim, and of the new-born Prince's designation

as successor to the Imāmate, (it was) conceived in the following terms :—

In the name of God the Merciful, the Gracious.

From the servant of God and His beloved, al-Mansūr Abu 'Aly al-Āmir bi-Aḥkam Illah, Prince of the Faithful, Unto the Honourable Lady, the Queen, the highly esteemed, the pure, the stainless, the unparagoned of her age, Sovereign Lady of the Kings of Yaman, the Pillar of Islām, the Special friend of the Imām, Treasure of the Faith, Support of the true believers, Refuge unto them that seek aid, Protectress of the truly directed, Favourite of the Prince of the Faithful, Guardian of his favoured servants. May God perpetuate her power and prosperity, and grant her increasing support and assistance. Peace be with thee!

The Prince of the Faithful praiseth God, than whom there is none other God but He, and prayeth Him to bless his ancestor Muḥammad, the seal of the Prophets and Lord of the Apostles. May God bless him and his pure family the truly directed Imāms, and hail them with salutations of peace.

And after. Verily the favours of God unto the Prince of the Faithful cannot be reckoned. Their magnitude is beyond all power of measurement and their limit cannot be defined. The mind of man cannot encompass them. For they are even as the clouds in the heavens, of which one departeth and another ever cometh, as the flashing rays of the sun that perpetually issue forth and envelop the earth, and as the lion whose visits are unceasing, who cometh in the morning and returneth in the shadows of evening.

But God's noblest gift to the Prince of the Faithful, the greatest and the most widely renowned, the most brilliant in honour and distinction, is that recently conferred upon him by the birth of a child, pure and highly prized, virtuous and pious, on the night that ushered in the dawn of Sunday the fourth of the month of Rabī'u 'l-Ākhir of the year 524. The pulpits of the world have exhaled fragrance on the proclamation (therefrom) of his name, and the hopes of all men, of the people of the plains and of the dwellers in cities, are directed to the wealth-imparting clouds of his beneficence. The darkness of night hath been illumined by the light of his noble presence and by the shining beauty of his countenance, and through him the necklace of disjointed precious jewels are strung, to add increased lustre to the brilliant dynasty of the Fāṭimites. God hath brought him forth from the lineage of the Prophet, like as light is brought forth from light, and the Prince of the Faithful hath obtained, through his birth, showers of brilliant sparks proceeding from the flint and steel of felicity. He hath named him aṭ-Ṭayyib, for the sweetness of his nature, and he hath surnamed him Abu 'l-Kāsim, the surname of his ancestor the Prophet of true guidance, from whose substance his substance hath sprung.

The Prince of the Faithful praiseth God Most High for the grace he hath bestowed upon him by raising a shining star in the firmament of the Imperial dynasty and a light-giving orb in the empyrean of its glory, and for filling him with the thankfulness that tendeth to the continuance of God's mercies, and to an abundant downflow from the beneficent clouds of His indulgence and goodness.

He prayeth that God may grant unto him, through the birth of this child, the accomplishment of his furthest hopes, that he may through him be linked with the Imāmate as long as day continues to be joined unto night; that God may make this child a refuge for the truly directed, a living proof against them that deny, a help unto them that are under constraint, a succourer unto them that seek assistance, an asylum to them that are in fear, and a source of happiness to the patient; that the world through him may attain its most abundant happiness and prosperity, and that each day, as it ariseth, may disclose its pearly teeth in smiles.

By reason of the lofty rank bestowed upon thee by the Prince of the Faithful and of thy position unequalled and unmatched, I make known unto thee these auspicious tidings, glorious and important and widely celebrated, that thou mayest abundantly rejoice thereat, and that thou mayest spread them among thy servants and divinely favoured people, that they may be equally known to them that are distant and to them that are near, that by knowledge of these tidings the necklace of happiness be strung, and that their sweet fragrance be exhaled as that of fresh aloes-wood from Mandal and of camphor.* Be this known unto thee and make it known, with the permission of God Most High.

Written on the day above mentioned. May God bless his Apostle our Lord Muḥammad and his family the pure Imāms, hail them with salutations of peace, exalt them and honour them unto the last day! ¹⁰³

* Mandal is said to be the name of a place in India (the Indian Archipelago?), celebrated for its aloes-wood.

Soon after the sceptre departed from the hands of our Lord al-Āmir, and al-Ḥāfiẓ succeeded. The first edict that reached the Queen from him purported to proceed from the appointed heir to the Empire of the Muslims.

In the second year of the Prince of the Faithful, the Queen appointed the noble Dā'y Ibrahīm ibn al-Ḥusayn al-Ḥāmīdi.

She next transferred the office of Dā'y on behalf of the Khalīfah al-Ḥāfiẓ to the family of Zuray'. "Sufficient," said the Queen, "for the Banu aṣ-Ṣulayḥi, is that which they know respecting (the fate of?) our Lord at-Tayyib."*

Then the office was held by his son Ḥātīm ibn Ibrahīm ibn al-Ḥusayn al-Ḥāmīdi, until that time.

It was transferred under the reign of al-Ḥāfiẓ to the family of Zuray'. One of them (or, the first) was the unparagoned Amīr Saba son of Abu Su'ūd, son of Zuray' son of al-'Abbas the Yāmīte, who combined the office of Dā'y with sovereign rule. He was succeeded by his son, the great, the crowned, the powerful Dā'y, Dā'y of the Prince of the Faithful, Muḥammad son of Saba, in whose hands likewise the functions of Dā'y and the royal office were combined.

We have now, in this abridgment, supplied an abstract of the history of the kings of the country of Yaman and of the Dā'ys.

End of the auspicious history. Praise be to God, by whose grace all good works are brought to completion.

* See Note 102. It will be noticed that in Janadi we find the verb عمل to do instead of علم to know.

103 THE HISTORY OF YAMAN

EXTRACTED FROM THE GENERAL HISTORY OF ‘ABD AR-RAḤMAN IBN KHALDŪN.

THE HISTORY OF YAMAN AND OF THE ISLAMITIC STATES THAT HAVE EXISTED THEREIN SUBJECT TO THE ‘ABBĀSIDES AND ‘OBAYDITES, AND OF ALL ITS ARAB KINGS, A GENERAL ACCOUNT OF THEIR RISE AND VICISSITUDES, FOLLOWED BY SEPARATE HISTORICAL NOTICES, UNDER THE HEADING OF EACH CITY AND KINGDOM OF THE COUNTRY, ONE BY ONE.

WE have related, in the latter part of the Prophetical History, how Yaman became part of the Islamitic Empire, through the submission of Badhān, its governor under Kisra (Chosroes), to Islām. The people were converted along with him, and the Prophet appointed him Amīr over all its provinces. His residence was at Ṣan‘ā, the seat of government of the ancient kings, the Tubbas. When the Prince died, after the Farewell Pilgrimage, the Prophet (may God bless him and hail him with salutations of peace) divided Yaman among provincial governors, subject to himself, and appointed Shahr son of Badhān over Ṣan‘ā.

We have likewise related the story of al-Aswad al-'Ansi (the 'Ansite), how he drove the governors of the Prophet out of Yaman, how he marched upon Ṣan'ā, possessed himself of the city, how he slew Shahr son of Badhān, took his wife in marriage, made himself master of the greater part of Yaman, and how most of its people apostatized. The Prophet wrote to his followers and deputies, as also to all who had steadfastly adhered to the faith. Through the medium of Fayrūz son of her uncle, they entered into communication with the wife of Shahr, whom al-Aswad had married. The leading part, in these occurrences, was taken by Ḳays ibn 'Abd Yaghūth,* the Murādite. He, Fayrūz and Dādhwahy came to al-Aswad by night, with the concurrence of his wife, and slew him. The governors of the Prophet returned to their provinces, and this occurred shortly before the Prophet's death.

Ḳays became sole ruler at Ṣan'ā and he collected together the scattered soldiery of al-Aswad. Abu Bakr appointed Fayrūz and the Abnas who owned his authority, over Yaman, and commanded the people to obey him. Fayrūz attacked Ḳays ibn Makshūḥ and put him to flight.¹⁰⁴

Abu Bakr then appointed al-Muhājir ibn Abi Umayyah to be commander in the war against the apostates of Yaman, and likewise 'Ukrimah ibn Abi Jahl, who was ordered to commence by operating against the apostates of 'Omān, and then to join al-Muhājir. At a later date, Yaman was placed under the government of Ya'la ibn Munyah. He afterwards joined 'Ā'ishah at Mecca, whence he accompanied her and took part in the battle of the Camel.¹⁰⁵

'Aly appointed over Yaman 'Obayd Allah ibn 'Abbās, and then 'Obayd Allah's brother 'Abd Allah. Afterwards Mu'awiyah appointed over

* Also known as Ibn Makshūḥ.

Ṣan‘ā Fayrūz the Daylamite, who died A.H. 53. In A.H. 72, when ‘Abd al-Malik sent al-Ḥajjāj against Ibn Zubayr, he named him governor of Yaman. When the dynasty of the ‘Abbasides was established (the Khalīfah Abu ‘l-‘Abbas ‘Abd Allah) as-Saffāh appointed over the province his uncle Dā-ūd ibn ‘Aly, and upon Dā-ūd’s death, in A.H. 133, he replaced him by Muḥammad, son of his maternal uncle Yazid (read Ziyād), son of ‘Obayd Allah son (descendant) of ‘Abd al-Madān.

Thenceforward the governorship passed successively from one ruler to another, all of whom established their residence at Ṣan‘ā, until the accession of al-Ma‘mūn to the Khalīfate. The missionaries of the Ṭālibites appeared in the provinces, and Abu ‘s-Sarāya, of the Banu Shaybān, proclaimed in ‘Irāq the supremacy of Muḥammad ibn Ibrahīm Ṭabātabā, son of Isma‘īl, son of Ibrahīm, the latter, brother (read uncle) of the Mahdi, an-Najf az-Zakīyah (the pure in spirit), Muḥammad, son of ‘Abd Allah son of Ḥasan (son of Ḥasan son of ‘Aly son of Abu Ṭālib). Disturbances increased in violence and Muḥammad ibn Ṭabātabā appointed rulers over the various provinces. He was eventually killed, and Muḥammad son of Ja‘far aṣ-Ṣādiq was proclaimed in the Ḥijāz, whilst in Yaman, Ibrahīm son of Mūsa al-Kāzim rebelled in A.H. 200.* He did not succeed in his designs, and he was surnamed al-Jazzār (the Butcher), by reason of his blood-shedding disposition. Al-Ma‘mūn sent troops to Yaman, who subdued the country. They removed large numbers of the leading men, and Yaman acquired a settled condition, in the manner we will proceed to relate.

* See Genealogical Table of Imāms, Note 107.

THE DYNASTY OF ZIYĀD UNDER THE SUPREMACY OF THE ABBASIDES.

AMONG the leading men of Yaman sent up to al-Ma'mūn there was one, Muḥammad son of Ziyād, a descendant of 'Obayd Allah son of Ziyād son of Abu Sufyān. He propitiated the Khalifah, and having engaged to protect Yaman against the Alides, he won his favour and was appointed to the government of the province, where he arrived in A.H. 203. He conquered the Tihāmah of Yaman, that is to say, the western country adjoining the sea-coast, and founded there the city of Zabīd, which became his place of residence and the capital of his kingdom. He appointed over the highlands his freedman Ja'far. Tihāmah was conquered after a struggle with the Arab tribes, and they were subjected to a stipulation that they should not make use of riding horses. Ibn Ziyād became sovereign of the whole of Yaman. His authority was recognized in the provinces of Ḥadramaut, ash-Shihr and Diyār (the country of the) Banu Kindah, and he acquired the power and dignity formerly enjoyed by the Tubbas (the ancient Kings of Yaman).

There existed at Ṣan'ā, the chief city of Yaman, the Banu Ya'fur, descendants of Ḥimyar, one of the noblest families that had survived the rule of the Tubbas. They exercised supreme authority over the city and owned allegiance to the Abbasides. Besides Ṣan'ā they possessed Bayḥān, Najrān,* and Jurash. The last of the family were As'ad ibn Ya'fur and, next after him, his brother Muḥammad. The Banu Ya'fur recognized the supremacy of Ibn Ziyād.

'Aththar, likewise one of the kingdoms of Yaman,

* See infra, p. 172, and 'Omārah, supra, p. 6. The Paris MS. writes Tajrāt.

was under the rule of Suleymān ibn Ṭarf, who also submitted.

Muḥammad ibn Ziyād perished, and he was succeeded by his son Ibrahīm. Then followed Ziyād son of Ibrahīm, then the brother of Ziyād, Abu 'l-Jaysh Iṣḥāk son of Ibrahīm. His reign endured for a long period, until he attained the age of eighty years. 'Omārah says that he reigned eighty years over Yaman, Ḥadramaut and the maritime islands. When Abu 'l-Jaysh heard of the assassination of the Khalīfah al-Mutawakkil and afterwards of the abdication of al-Musta'in (A.H. 252) and of the subjection of the Khalifate to the Turkish freedmen, he discontinued the payment of tribute, and when riding forth, he caused a canopy to be borne over his head, according to the usage of the independent Persian kings.¹⁰⁶

Under his reign Yaḥya son of al-Ḥusayn son of al-Kāsim ar-Rassy son of Ibrahīm Ṭabāṭabā arose in Yaman proclaiming the supremacy of the Zaydites.¹⁰⁷ He came from Sind, whither his grandfather al-Kāsim had fled, upon the suppression of the insurrection led by his brother Muḥammad and by Abu 's-Sarāya, of which we have related the history.

Al-Kāsim sought refuge in Sind and there his son Ḥusayn and his grandson Yaḥya were born. Yaḥya appeared in Yaman in A.H. 288 and proceeded to 106 Sa'dah, where he made open profession of the doctrines of the Zaydites. He then marched upon San'ā and wrested it from the hands of As'ad ibn Ya'fur, but the Banu Ya'fur recaptured the city and Yaḥya returned to Sa'dah. His followers gave him the title of Imām and his descendants occupy the country at the present day. We have herein before related their history.*

It was likewise in the days of Abu 'l-Jaysh, that the claims of the 'Obaydites were proclaimed in Yaman. Muḥammad (read 'Aly) ibn al-Faḍl established his authority in their name, in A.H. 340, over Aden Lā'ah and over the highlands of Yaman, as far as Mount Mudhaykhirah.

The country that remained subject to Abu 'l-Jaysh extended from ash-Sharjah to Aden, twenty days' journey, and from his own province to San'ā, five days' journey. When Muḥammad ('Aly) ibn al-Faḍl overcame him by spreading recognition of the 'Obaydite supremacy in Yaman, the rulers of the outlying provinces cast off their allegiance to Abu 'l-Jaysh. Among them were the Banu As'ad ibn Ya'fur at Ṣan'ā, Suleyman ibn Ṭarf at 'Aththar and the Imām ar-Rassy at Ṣa'dah. Abu 'l-Jaysh adopted a conciliatory policy with them.

He perished in A.H. 371. He had extended his kingdom and had increased its revenues. Ibn Sa'īd says that he had examined a statement according to which the revenues of Abu 'l-Jaysh amounted to 1,366,000 'Ashariyah dinārs,* besides duties levied upon the shipping from Sind, upon ambergris arriving at Bāb al-Mandeb and at Aden-Abyan, on the pearl fisheries, and besides the taxes collected in the Island of Dahlak, which included one thousand slaves. The Kings of Abyssinia, on the opposite shores, were in the habit of offering him presents, and sought his friendship.

At his death he left a young child of the name of 'Abd Allah or Ibrahīm or, as is also said, of the name of Ziyād. His sister and his freedman Rashīd the Abyssinian became the guardians of the child. Rashīd appointed over the highlands his mamluk Ḥasan (Ḥusayn) ibn Salāmah the Nubian. Thenceforth the office of wazīr passed from one Abyssinian or Nubian freedman to another. They acquired absolute control over the state, and the Ziyādite dynasty at length came to an end in A.H. 407 (read 409).

* Read: Amounted in A.H. 366 to one million 'Aththariyah dinārs. It will be observed that Ibn Sa'īd's statement is simply appropriated from 'Omārah, who, as we have seen, borrowed his information from Ibn Ḥauḳal. (Note 12.)

The child died and was succeeded by another, also of the family of the Banu Ziyād, younger than his predecessor. Ibn Sa'īd remarks that 107 'Omārah knew not his name, in consequence of the absolute control exercised over the Prince by the chamberlains. He means 'Omārah, the historian of Yaman. It is, however, said that this second child bore the name of Ibrahīm. He was placed under the guardianship of his aunt and of Marjān one of the freedmen of Ḥasan (Ḥusayn) ibn Salāmah. Marjān became possessed of supreme power. He had two freedmen, Ḳays * and Najāh. He placed the infant Prince, the nominal King, under the care of Ḳays (Nafīs), who was appointed to reside at Zabīd along with the child. Najāh he appointed over all the provinces other than Zabīd, including the cities of al-Kadrā and al-Mahjam. Marjān preferred Ḳays (Nafīs) to Najāh, between whom jealousy consequently arose. It was stated to Ḳays (Nafīs) that the child's aunt favoured Najāh, and was in secret correspondence with him. He seized her (and the child), with the concurrence of his master Marjān, and buried them alive. He assumed exclusive and supreme power, adopted the use of the royal umbrella, and put his own name on the coinage.

In extreme anger at what had occurred, Najāh placed himself at the head of an army, and marched against Ḳays (Nafīs), who came forth to meet him. Several engagements and battles took place and Ḳays (Nafīs) was eventually defeated and killed, along with five thousand men of his army. Najāh gained possession of Zabīd in A.H. 412, and buried

* See Note 13, last par.

Ḳays (Nafīs) and his master Marjān in the place of the child and its aunt. He assumed paramount authority and the coinage was struck in his name. He wrote to the supreme council of the Khalifah at Baghdad, and was formally appointed to rule over Yaman. He continued to exercise absolute sway over Tihāmah and the highlands, and he abolished in the mountain districts, the authority of the rulers appointed by Ḥasan (Ḥusayn) ibn Salāmah. The neighbouring kings dreaded his power, and he continued in the enjoyment of that high estate until his assassination by ‘Aly aṣ-Ṣulayḥī, the representative of the ‘Obaydites, who encompassed his death, in A.H. 452, by means of poison administered by a female slave he sent to the King.

Najāḥ was succeeded at Zabīd by his freedman Kahlān. Afterwards aṣ-Ṣulayḥī possessed himself of the city and ruled over it, as will be related.

THE HISTORY OF THE BANU ‘Aly-ṢULAYḤI, WHO RULED UNDER THE AUTHORITY OF THE ‘OBAYDITES, AND PROPAGATED THEIR SUPREMACY IN YAMAN.

THE Ḳādi Muḥammad ibn ‘Aly the Hamdānite, surnamed aṣ-Ṣulayḥī, was the chief of Ḥarāz in the country of the Hamdānites. He was descended from the tribe of the Banu Yām, and there grew up unto him a son named ‘Aly. The office of Dā‘y for the ‘Obaydites was at that time held by ‘Āmir son of ‘Abd Allah az-Zawāḥī (the Zawāḥite), so named after a village in Ḥarāz. It was said that he possessed the book al-Jafrī, one of the treasures, it was represented, of the ‘Obaydite Imāms, and it was pretended that the name of ‘Aly, son of the Ḳādi Muḥammad, was mentioned in the book.

‘Aly studied under the directions of the Dā’y and received his teaching. When the youth’s merits and talent became manifest, the Dā’y showed him his name and particulars describing him, set forth in the book. “Take care of your son,” he said to the Kādi, “for he will be ruler over the whole of Yaman.”

‘Aly grew up a Jurist noted for piety. For fifteen years he was leader of the pilgrimage by way of Ṭā’if and the Sarawāt. He attained a great reputation, his name became widely known, and people commonly spoke of him as Sulṭān of Yaman. The Dā’y ‘Āmir az-Zawāhi died bequeathing to him his writings and appointing him his successor. ‘Aly led the caravan of pilgrims in A.H. 428, according to his previous custom, and during the celebration of the ceremonies of the Mausim,* he assembled certain men belonging to his tribe, that of Hamdān, who had accompanied him, and called upon them for their assistance and support. They consented and swore allegiance to him. They were sixty in number, ranking among the most manly members of the tribe.

On his return, he established himself at Masār, a fortress on the summit of one of the mountains of Ḥarāz, which he strengthened. His power waxed great, and he wrote to al-Mustanṣir, then ruling in Egypt, requesting to be allowed to make open proclamation of the ‘Obaydite doctrines. He received the desired permission and carried his design into effect. He made himself master of the whole of Yaman, and took up his residence at Ṣan‘ā, where he built palaces and made the Yamanite Kings, whom he had conquered, take up their abode beside him. He drove forth the Banu Ṭarf, Kings of ‘Aththar and Tihāmah, and in A.H. 452, as we have mentioned, he brought about the death of Najāḥ, freedman of the Ziyādites and King of Zabīd, by means of a slave girl, he sent as a present to the Prince.

He then proceeded to Mecca by command of al-Mustanṣir the ruler of Egypt, for the purpose of putting an end to the 'Abbaside supremacy and to the rulership of the Ḥasanites. He appointed his son, al-Mukarram Aḥmad, his deputy at Ṣan'ā, and he took with him his wife Asmā daughter of Shihāb, as also the kings who had their abode with him, such as Ibn al-Kurandi, Ibn Ya'fur at-Tubba'y, Wā'il ibn 'Isa al-Wuḥāzy, and others. Sa'id ibn Najāḥ made a night attack upon him at al-Mahjam and killed him. This happened in A.H. 463 (read 473).

He was succeeded by his son al-Mukarram Aḥmad, who possessed himself of supreme power and established himself at Ṣan'ā. His mother, Asmā daughter of Shihāb, had been captured by Sa'id ibn Najāḥ, on the night of the attack. She sent a letter to her son al-Mukarram. "I am with child," she wrote, "by the squint-eyed slave Sa'id, al-Aḥwal. Come to me before my delivery, or disgrace will ensue, such as time will never efface." Al-Mukarram started from Ṣan'ā in the year 475, at the head of three thousand men. The Abyssinians numbered twenty thousand, but he routed them. Sa'id ibn Najāḥ fled to the Island of Dahlak. Al-Mukarram presented himself to his mother, who was seated in the archway (or casement) near which the heads of aṣ-Ṣulayḥi and of his brother were displayed. He took them down and buried them, and unsheathed the sword in vengeance against the city. He re-instated his maternal uncle As'ad ibn Shihāb over Tihāmah as before, giving him Zabīd for his place of residence, and he then departed with his mother for Ṣan'ā.

She conducted the affairs of his kingdom. After a time, As'ad ibn Shihāb having collected the tribute of Tihāmāh, transmitted it under the charge of his wazīr Aḥmad ibn Sālim, and Asmā distributed the money among the envoys from the Arab tribes. She died in A.H. 477,* and in 479, al-Mukarram lost possession of Zabīd, which was recovered by Sa'īd ibn Najāh. Al-Mukarram removed to Dhu Jiblah in 480 and appointed over Ṣan'ā 'Imrān ibn al-Faḍl the Hamdānite.

'Imrān became independent and transmitted the sovereignty to his descendants. His son Aḥmad assumed the title of Sulṭān, under which he acquired great celebrity. He was succeeded by his son Hātīm son of Aḥmad, but after him there was at Ṣan'ā no Prince of any renown, until the city was conquered by the Suleymānites, upon that family being overcome at Mecca by the Hāshimites, as is mentioned in their history.† Dhu Jiblah is a city founded by 'Abd Allah son of Muḥammad aṣ-Ṣulayḥī in the year 458. Al-Mukarram removed thither by the advice of his wife Sayyidah daughter of Aḥmad, who acquired the direction of the affairs of his kingdom, after the death of his mother Asmā. He made Dhu Jiblah his place of residence and built in that city the Dār al-'Izz (the abode of Majesty). He applied himself to contrive the death of Sa'īd ibn Najāh and succeeded in his design, as we will relate in the history of Ibn Najāh.

Al-Mukarram became absorbed in the pursuit of

* Read 479. See supra, p. 37.

† See infra, p. 187 and Note 130. It is hardly necessary to add that the Suleymānites never conquered Ṣan'ā. Ibn Khaldūn, misled, it would appear by Ibn Sa'īd, has hopelessly confused the Suleymānites and Rassites. But it will indeed be seen that the Rassite Imāms themselves did not at the period referred to, nor for long after it, become permanently possessed of Ṣan'ā. And Ibn Khaldūn's statement touching 'Imrān ibn al-Faḍl and his descendants, is likewise incorrect. See Note 8, the latter part.

pleasure, living in a state of seclusion with his wife. When on the point of death in 484, he bequeathed his dignities to the son of his paternal uncle, al-Manşūr Saba son of Aḥmad son of al-Muzaffar son of ‘Aly aṣ-Ṣulayḥī, Lord of the fortress of Ashyah.¹⁰⁸ He was invested by al-Mustanşir the ‘Obaydite and made that fortress his place of residence, whilst Sayyidah daughter of Aḥmad remained at Dhu Jiblah. He sought her in marriage, but she refused, whereupon he laid siege to the castle she inhabited. Her uterine brother Suleymān ibn ‘Āmir az-Zawāḥī assured him that she would not consent, unless commanded by al-Mustanşir the Egyptian Khalīfah. Al-Manşūr accordingly made application to al-Mustanşir, who complied with his request. A eunuch arrived from the Court of the Khalīfah, and acquainted the Princess with the purpose of his mission. He recited to her the verse: *Unto no believer, male nor female, belongeth liberty of choice when the decree of God and of His Apostle hath gone forth. “The Prince of the Faithful,” he continued, “marries thee to the Dā’y Manşūr Abu Ḥimyar Saba son of Aḥmad son of al-Muzaffar, and appoints unto thee a dowry of one hundred thousand dinārs in money and fifty thousand dinārs in articles of rarity and value.” The contract of marriage was entered into and Saba proceeded from the fortress of Ashyah to Dhu Jiblah, and joined his wife in the Dār al-‘Izz. It is said that she sent him a slave girl who bore an exceeding resemblance to herself, that the girl stood at the head of his couch, and that he never raised his eyes unto her until morning, when he returned to Ashyah, whilst the Princess remained at Dhu Jiblah.

of the Banu Yām, the tribe to which the Sulayhites belonged.* He invited his allies of the tribe of Janb to join him. He appointed an abode for them at Dhu Jiblah, close to his own place of residence, and they supported him in warlike enterprises.

Sayyidah was in the habit of spending the summer at Ta'kar, where she kept her treasury and valuables. On the approach of winter she returned to Dhu Jiblah. After a time al-Mufaḍḍal remained alone in possession at Ta'kar, without interruption to their friendly intercourse. He departed to make war upon the family of Najāḥ. A Jurist, who bore the surname of al-Jamal, seized the opportunity to raise an insurrection in the castle of Ta'kar, assisted by several (or seven) other men of his profession, one of whom was Ibrahīm ibn Zeydān, paternal uncle of 'Omārah the poet. They swore allegiance to al-Jamal, on the condition that he should put an end to the supremacy of the Imāmites. Al-Mufaḍḍal hastening back besieged them, and the Banu Khaulān came to the assistance of the rebels. Al-Mufaḍḍal adopted a conciliatory and temporizing policy towards the Khaulānites, but perished in the course of the siege, in A.H. 504.

The Lady Sayyidah thereupon came to the spot and prevailed upon the Khaulānites to enter into an alliance, the terms of which she faithfully 111 observed. She constituted herself guardian of the family and son of al-Mufaḍḍal. The castle of Ta'kar passed into the hands of 'Imrān ibn az-Zarr the Khaulānite and of his brother Suleymān, and 'Imrān acquired the influence formerly exercised by al-Mufaḍḍal over the Lady Sayyidah. At her death, he and his brother remained sole masters of the castle of Ta'kar.

* 'Omārah speaks of Abu 'l-Barakāt as a Ḥimyarite.

Manṣūr, the son of al-Mufaḍḍal son of Abu 'l-Barakāt, became possessed of Dhu Jiblah, and held the fortress until he sold it to the Zuray'ite Dā'y, the ruler of Aden, as will hereafter be related. He established his residence in the stronghold of Ashyaḥ, which had formerly belonged to the Dā'y al-Manṣūr Sabā son of Aḥmad.

Al-Manṣūr Sabā had died in A.H. 486 (read 492), after which discord arose among his children. His son 'Aly succeeded in gaining possession of the castle of Ashyaḥ. He gave annoyance to al-Mufaḍḍal ibn Abi 'l-Barakāt and to the Lady Sayyidah, and they felt themselves helpless against him, until al-Mufaḍḍal at length contrived, by means of poison concealed in a quince, to bring about the death of his enemy.

The family of Abu 'l-Barakāt possessed itself of the fortresses of the Banu Muḏaffar, and al-Mufaḍḍal died soon afterwards, as has been related. Sayyidah undertook the guardianship of his son Manṣūr, who did not hold independent authority. But upon his advancing in years, he became possessed of the dominion held by his father over the fortress of Ta'kar and its castles, over Dhu Jiblah and its fortresses, and of that formerly exercised by the Banu Muḏaffar over Ashyaḥ and its fortresses. After a time he sold the castle of Dhu Jiblah to the Zuray'ite Dā'y, the Prince of Aden, for 100,000 dinārs, and he continued to sell his fortresses, one after the other, until none remained unto him but that of Ta'izz, of which he was deprived by 'Aly son of Mahdy, after he had reigned for eighty years and had attained the age of one hundred.* And God, be He magnified and exalted, possesseth supreme knowledge of the truth.

THE HISTORY OF THE DOMINION, AT ZABĪD, OF THE BANU NAJĀH, FREEDMEN OF THE BANU ZIYĀD, THEIR EARLY CAREER AND THE VICISSITUDES THEY UNDERWENT.

‘ALY AŞ-ŞULAYĪ, as has been related, gained possession of Zabīd from the hands of Kahlan, after having destroyed him (read Najāh) by poison in A.H. 452 with the assistance of the slave girl he had sent him.

- 112 Najāh had three sons, Mu‘ārik, Sa‘īd and Jayyāsh. Mu‘ārik committed suicide, and the two remaining brother stook refuge in the Island of Dahlak, where they abode, occupying themselves in the study of the Kur‘ān and of literature. After a time Sa‘īd departed, in anger with his brother Jayyāsh, and returned to Zabīd, where he concealed himself in a cave, which he dug for himself in the ground. He then sent for his brother Jayyāsh, who joined him and they remained together in concealment.

It next happened that the Hāshimite Amīr of Mecca, Muḥammad ibn Ja‘far, having renounced the supremacy of the ‘Obaydite Khalīfah of Egypt al-Mustanşir, the latter wrote to aŞ-Şulayḫi, commanding him to make war upon the Amīr and to compel him to maintain the Alide supremacy at Mecca. ‘Aly aŞ-Şulayḫi accordingly marched from Şan‘ā, and thereupon Sa‘īd and his brother issued forth from their hiding-place. AŞ-Şulayḫi obtaining intelligence thereof, despatched against them a force of about five thousand horsemen,* with orders to put the two brothers to death. But Sa‘īd and Jayyāsh avoided the troops and went in pursuit of aŞ-Şulayḫi and his army. They made a night attack upon him at al-Mahjam, which he had reached on his way to Mecca. He had with him five thousand Abyssinian† who, however, made no attempt to defend him. His troops were scattered and as-Ṣulayḥi was killed, falling, it is said, at the hands of Jayyāsh. This occurred in the year 473. ‘Abd Allah aṣ-Ṣulayḥi brother of ‘Aly, was likewise killed, as well as one hundred and seventy men of the family of Ṣulayḥi, and ‘Aly’s wife Asmā, daughter of his uncle Shihāb, was captured together with thirty-five Kaḥṭānite kings, who had been deprived of their dominion in Yaman. Sa‘īd sent to the troops that had been despatched against himself and against his brother, granted them an amnesty and took them into his own service. He then marched upon Zabīd, which was ruled by As‘ad ibn Shihāb the brother of Asmā, wife of aṣ-Ṣulayḥi. As‘ad fled to Ṣan‘ā, and Sa‘īd made his entrance into Zabīd with Asmā, the wife of aṣ-Ṣulayḥi, borne in front of him in a litter, close to which were carried the heads of ‘Aly and of his brother. He placed Asmā in the palace of Zabīd, and set up the two heads opposite the casement of her apartment. The hearts of the people were filled with dread, and Sa‘īd assumed the title of Naṣīr ad-Daulah (Defender of the State).

The commanders of the fortresses made themselves masters of the places that had been entrusted to them. At Ṣan‘ā, al-Mukarram son of aṣ-Ṣulayḥi, was thrown into a state of stupor and all but utter helplessness.

His mother Asmā wrote to him from Zabīd, stimulating and inciting him: “I am great with child,” she wrote, “by Sa‘īd. Come therefore unto me, before disgrace light upon thee and upon the whole Arab nation.” Al-Mukarram thereupon contrived to instigate Sa‘īd son of Najāḥ into an attack upon Ṣan‘ā, employing as his medium one of the commanders on the frontier, and flattering Sa‘īd with promises of victory.¹⁰⁹

Sa‘īd consequently advanced at the head of twenty thousand Abyssinians. Al-Mukarram issued forth from Ṣan'ā, and put the enemy to flight. He turned their position so as to intercept the road to Zabīd, and Sa'īd fled to the Island of Dahlak.

Al-Mukarram entered Zabīd and proceeded to his mother, whom he found seated at the casement near which were exposed the heads of aṣ-Ṣulayḥi and of his brother. He took them down and buried them. And he appointed over Zabīd his maternal uncle As'ad in the year 497 (read 475). He then departed for Ṣan'ā, but Sa'īd subsequently returned to Zabīd in A.H. 479.

Al-Mukarram wrote to Abu 'Abd Allah ibn Ya'fur (read Abu 'Abd Allah al-Ḥusayn), Lord of the fortress of Sha'ir, desiring him to incite Sa'īd against himself, to urge upon him the capture of Dhu Jiblah and to represent, as the motive of his action, that al-Mukarram was absorbed in the pursuit of pleasure, that he lived in a state of subjection to his wife Sayyidah daughter of Aḥmad, and that he was afflicted with paralysis. The artifice was crowned with success. Sa'īd came forth at the head of thirty thousand Abyssinians, and al-Mukarram prepared an ambush for him below the castle of Sha'ir. Sa'īd fell a victim to treachery. His troops were routed and he himself killed. His head was put up at Zabīd on the spot, close to the casement, where the head of aṣ-Ṣulayḥi was formerly exposed. Al-Mukarram became master of the city of Zabīd, and its subjection to the Abyssinians ceased. Jayyāsh fled accompanied by his brother's wazīr Khalf son of Abu 'Iḥāhir the Marwānite. They entered Aden in disguise and thence they proceeded to India, where they remained for six months. They met in that country a diviner, who came from (the island of) Sarandīb and who cheered them with happy predictions concerning their future fortunes. They returned to Yaman and the wazīr Khalf proceeded in advance to Zabīd, where he spread a report of the death of Jayyāsh, and obtained an amnesty for himself. Jayyāsh also came to Zabīd, but remained in concealment.

The Governor of Zabīd at that time was As‘ad ibn Shihāb, the maternal uncle of al-Mukarram, and along with him ‘Aly ibn al-Ḳumm, wazīr of al-Mukarram. This man entertained feelings of intense hatred against al-Mukarram and his dynasty. The wazīr Khalf contrived to win his confidence and played chess with Ḥusayn the son of ‘Aly. After a time he played with the father. He won his favour and then revealed to him the plans he had conceived touching the government, informing him that he was an adherent of the family of Najāh. Whilst playing, Khalf was one day speaking in a manner calculated to stimulate the dislike of his hosts to the Sulayhites,* when ‘Aly ibn al-Ḳumm overheard him. ‘Aly questioned him and Khalf revealed his purpose, swearing him to secrecy. During that time Jayyāsh was collecting his Abyssinian followers and spending money upon them, until they gathered to the number of five thousand men. He then suddenly, in the year 482, rose in insurrection at Zabīd. He seized the Government House, but treated As‘ad ibn Shihāb with kindness, in consideration of the infirmities with which he was afflicted, and set him at liberty. Jayyāsh became King of Zabīd and of Tihāmah and instituted the Khutbah in the name of the ‘Abbasides, whilst the Sulayhites recited it in the name of the ‘Obaydites. Al-Mukarram unceasingly sent the Arabs on predatory expeditions against Zabīd, until Jayyāsh died at the commencement (read at the end) of the fifth century. He bore the surname of Abu 't-Tāmi (the Exalted), and was celebrated for his justice.

He was succeeded by his son al-Fātik, who, however, was opposed by his two brothers, Ibrahīm and 'Abd al-Wāhid. A struggle took place between him and his two brothers, in which he eventually triumphed. He perished in the year 503.

His slaves raised to the throne his son Manṣūr ibn Fātik, a boy below the age of puberty, and they conducted the affairs of his kingdom; but the Prince's uncle Ibrahīm came forth to attack him, and the slaves prepared troops to defend their own and the young Prince's authority. His other uncle 'Abd al-Wāhid thereupon rose in the city. Manṣūr sent to al-Mufaddal son of Abu 'l-Barakāt Prince of Ta'kar, who came professedly to his assistance, but concealing treacherous designs. He heard that the people of Ta'kar had revolted against him, and turned back.

Manṣūr remained king of Zabīd until one of his slaves, Abu Manṣūr Mann Allah, was appointed his wazīr and poisoned him, in the year 517.

Mann Allah raised to the throne the Prince's son Fātik, a young child, in whose name he governed the kingdom. The wazīr was accused of attempting the honour of the women of the family of Najāh, so that even the mother of the infant king Fātik fled from him, and took up her residence outside the city. Mann Allah was enterprising and brave, and he is celebrated for his wars with the enemy. He was 115 attacked by Ibn Najīb (ad-Daulah), the Dā'y of the Alides, against whom he successfully defended himself. It is he who erected stately colleges at Zabīd for the study of Jurisprudence. He also applied himself to the protection of the pilgrims and it was he that built the walls of the city. But after a time he addressed solicitations to the daughter of Mu'arik son of Jayyāsh. Perceiving no means of escape from him, she consented, but having surrendered herself to him, she brought about his death by means of a cloth saturated with poison, which caused his flesh to waste away. This occurred in the year 524. He was succeeded in the guardianship of the young Prince, by Zurayk (or Ruzayk), a freedman of the family of Najāh.

‘Omārah says of Zurayk that he was a sagacious man, remarkable for his bravery and fitness to command, and father of many children. After a time he became enfeebled, but no one succeeded to a firm hold of his office until the appointment, as wazīr, of Surūr the Abyssinian, who was surnamed al-Fātiki, and who was one of the freedmen in the personal service of the mother of Fātik.

According to ‘Omārah, Fātik son of Manṣūr died in A.H. 531. He was succeeded by the son of his paternal uncle, Fātik son of Muḥammad son of Fātik, with Surūr as his wazīr, the conductor of the affairs of the realm and of the wars with his enemies. Surūr was a constant attendant at the Mosque, where he was at length slain by an assassin, whom ‘Aly ibn Mahdy the Khārijite employed for the purpose, and who killed him whilst he was engaged in the afternoon prayer on Friday, 12th Ṣafar, 551. The people rose to attack the impious murderer. He killed several attendants of the mosque, but was overpowered and slain. The freedmen of the family of Najāh were thrown into a state of consternation. They were attacked by ‘Aly ibn Mahdy the Khārijite, who fought many battles with them and besieged them for a long period of time. They besought assistance of the Sharīf al-Manṣūr Aḥmad ibn Ḥamzah the Suleymānite, who ruled over Ṣa’dah.* He consented to help them, on condition of their raising him to the throne after killing their master Fātik ibn Muḥammad. They agreed to his conditions. The Prince was slain in A.H. 553 and the Sharīf Aḥmad was proclaimed King. But he was unable to withstand ibn Mahdy and fled under cover of night. ‘Aly ibn Mahdy possessed himself of the city in 554, and the dynasty of Najāh came to an end. Perpetuity belongeth unto God!

THE HISTORY OF THE DYNASTY OF THE BANU ZURAY‘
AT ADEN, DĀ‘YS OF THE ‘OBAYDITES IN YAMAN, OF ITS RISE AND PROGRESS.

ADEN is one of the strongest cities of Yaman. It is situated on the shores of the Indian Ocean, and has ever been a city of trade since the days of the Tubbas. Most of its inhabitants’ houses are constructed of reeds, and in consequence thereof fires frequently break out at night.

In the early years of Islām it was the seat of government of the Banu Ma‘n, who according to al-Bayhaḳi claim to be descended from Ma'n ibn Zā'idah, and who possessed themselves of the city in the days of al-Ma'mūn.¹¹⁰ They refused submission to the Banu Ziyād, who were obliged to content themselves with having the Khutbah and coinage in their names.

When the Dā'y 'Aly ibn Muḥammad aṣ-Ṣulayḥi conquered Yaman, he maintained in favour of the Banu Ma'n the protection due to them as Arabs, and imposed upon them the payment of a fixed tribute. But his son Aḥmad al-Mukarram expelled the Banu Ma'n from the city and appointed over it the Banu 'l-Karam, a family belonging to his tribe, that of Jusham ibn Yām, a subdivision of the Banu Hamdān. That family was the most nearly related to him in the tribe. The province remained under their rule for a time, but discord arose among them and they became divided into two parties, the family of Mas'ūd son of al-Karam, and the descendants of Zuray' son of al-'Abbās son of al-Karam. The latter after severe fighting prevailed over their opponents.

Ibn Sa'id says that the member of the dynasty who first attained celebrity, was the Dā'y Saba son of Abu Su'ūd son of az-Zuray'. He was the first to exercise undivided power over the State, after the disappearance of the Sulayhite supremacy, and his children inherited the throne. Saba was attacked by the son of his uncle, 'Aly son of Abu 'l Gharāt son of Mas'ūd son of al-Karam, lord of Za'āzi'. He (Saba) wrested Aden from his ('Aly's) hands, after the infliction of much suffering and at the cost of a heavy expenditure of money on the desert Arabs. He died in A.H. 533, seven months after the capture of the city. He was succeeded by his son al-A'azz, whose place of abode was the castle of ad-Dumlūwah, the fortress, which (by reason of its great strength) no enemy ever desires to attack.¹¹¹ Bilāl ibn Jarīr, a freedman of the Banu Zuray‘, opposed al-A‘azz at Aden and desired to transfer the authority exercised over the city by the retainers of the Prince, to Muḥammad son of Sabā son of Abu Su‘ūd son of Zuray‘. Muḥammad ibn Sabā, in fear for his own safety, fled to Dhu Jiblah and placed himself under the protection of Manṣūr ibn al-Mufaḍḍal, the Sulayhite King of the Highlands of Yaman.

Al-A‘azz died shortly after, and Bilāl sent for Muḥammad ibn Sabā, who thereupon came to Aden. A deed of investiture had come from Egypt in the name of al-A‘azz. The name of Muḥammad ibn Saba was substituted for that of his predecessor. Among the titles of honour which the charter conferred were those of the Great, the Crowned, the Mighty Dā‘y, the Sword of the Prince of the Faithful, all which were assumed by Muḥammad. Bilāl gave him his daughter in marriage and placed at his disposal the wealth he had accumulated in his treasury. After a time Bilāl died leaving immense riches, which were inherited by Muḥammad ibn Sabā and which he devoted to great and benevolent objects. He purchased the fortress of Dhu Jiblah, the residence of the Sulayhite kings, from Manṣūr ibn al-Mufaḍḍal ibn Abi ‘l-Barakāt, as we have already mentioned, and he married Sayyidah (read Arwa) the daughter of (‘Aly son of ?) ‘Abd Allah the Sulayhite. Muḥammad died in A.H. 548 and was succeeded by his son ‘Imrān son of Muḥammad son of Sabā. The affairs of his government were conducted by Yāsir son of Bilāl, and ‘Imrān died in 118 A.H. 560, leaving two infant sons, Muḥammad and Abu Su‘ūd. Yāsir confined them to the palace, and exercised supreme power over the State.

He was greatly eulogized and was liberal in his rewards to the poets. Among those who came to his court and wrote in his praise, was Ibn Kālāḳis the poet of Alexandria. The following line is from an ode he wrote in praise of Yāsir :—

Abandon thy home if thou desirest greatness—The crescent, having travelled, becomes a full moon.¹¹²

Yāsir was the last sovereign of the Zuray'ite dynasty. When Shams ad-Daulah Sayf al-Islām (read Turān Shah), brother of Saladin, invaded and conquered Yaman in A.H. 666 (read 569) he came to Aden, took possession of the city and laid hands upon Yāsir ibn Bilāl. The dynasty of the Zuray'ites came to an end, and Yaman became subject to the Ghuzz (Turks, Kurds, Circassians, etc.), and to their chiefs, of the dynasty of Ayyūb, as we will relate in their history. The city of al-Juwwah, near Aden, was founded by the Zuray'ite kings. The Ayyubite princes, when they became supreme, forsook that city and established their residence at Ta'izz in the mountains, as will hereafter be set forth.¹¹³

THE HISTORY OF IBN MAHDY THE KHĀRIJITE AND OF HIS SONS, THEIR RULE IN YAMAN, ITS RISE AND ITS FALL.

THIS man was a native of al-'Anbarah on the borders of the sea near Zabīd. His name was 'Aly ibn Mahdy, the Himyarite. His father Mahdy was noted for his virtue and piety. 'Aly was brought up in the religious opinions of his father, and he lived in retirement, devoting himself to a religious life. After a time he went on the pilgrimage. He met and became acquainted with certain doctors of 'Irāq, and he learnt from their preachers the art of warning and exhorting the people. He returned to Yaman, where he withdrew himself from society and occupied himself in preaching. He was an eloquent expounder of the Kur'ān, and he foretold events about to occur in his career. His predictions were followed by their fulfilment. The people listened to him with favour and he acquired popularity.

From the year 561 he travelled to and fro on the pilgrimage, preaching to the people in the deserts. At the season of the Mausim he attended it mounted on a dromedary he possessed. When the mother of Fātik gained paramount influence over the Banu Jayyāsh, in the days of her son Fātik son of Mansūr, she became a firm believer in him, and she released him, his kindred and the families with which he was allied by marriage, from payment of the imposts on their lands. They prospered and were held in honour, they made use of riding horses, and the party they formed became powerful. It became 119 'Aly's habit to say in the course of his sermons, that the time was near, meaning thereby the time of his manifestation, a thing that was widely spoken of throughout the country. The mother of Fātik, until she died in A.H. 545, restrained the state officials from molesting him.

The people of the highlands had induced Ibn Mahdy to bind himself by oath to support them, and in 538 he came forth from (into?) Tihāmah and reached al-Kadrā; but he was defeated and returned to the mountains, where he remained until 541. After that, the Lady the mother of Fātik restored him to his home, and she died in 545. Thereupon he departed and joined the Banu Khaulān, taking up his abode with one of their tribes known by the name of Haywan (Ḥaydān?), the owners of a fortress named ash-Sharaf. The ascent to the castle is of exceeding difficulty and extends a distance of a day's journey from the foot of the mountain, over a painfully laborious road, and through a narrow and steep pass. 'Aly Mahdy gave these people the designation of Anṣār, and upon his companions, who had accompanied him from Tihāmāh, he bestowed the name al-Muhājirūn. He appointed a chief over the Anṣār, of the name of Šabā, and another over the Muhājirūn to whom he gave the title of Sheykh al-Islām, and whose name was an-Nūbah. With the exception of these two men, 'Aly Mahdy allowed no one to penetrate into his presence.

He now despatched depredating parties into the province of Tihāmāh, and his success was promoted by the deserted condition of the country adjoining Zabīd. He stopped the traffic on the public roads, spread ruin throughout the district, and he penetrated to the castle of ad-Dāthir (read Dāshir), half a stage from Zabīd. He plotted the assassination of the Regent Surūr and succeeded in his design, as has already been related. He now began to harass the city with repeated attacks. 'Omārah says that he attacked it on seventy occasions and besieged it for a long period of time. At length the citizens besought assistance of the Sharīf Aḥmad ibn Ḥamzah, the Suleymānite Prince of Ṣa'dah. He gave them aid, but stipulated that they should slay their master Fātik son of Muḥammad, and they accordingly killed him in the year 553. The Sharīf was proclaimed sovereign, but was unable to withstand his enemies and took to flight. Thereupon 'Aly Mahdy seized the city in Rajab 554, but he died three months after his conquest.

He had assumed in the Khuṭbah the titles of the Imām, the Mahdy, Prince of the Faithful, Subjugator of infidels and of the wicked. He followed the doctrines of the Khārijites, denying the authority both of 'Aly and of 'Othmān, and treated sin as infidelity. He established rules and laws for his sect, which it would be tedious to describe. He punished the use of wine with death. According to 'Omārah, the penalty of death was likewise inflicted upon any Muslim, of whatever sect, who opposed him, and the wives and children of the condemned were reduced to slavery. His people believed him to be under Divine protection. Their property was in his hands. He supplied their wants and they possessed nothing, neither money, nor horses, nor weapons. He slew any one of his followers who fled from the field of battle. The fornicator, the drinker of wine, the listener to songs, were put to death, and death also was the punishment of any person who absented himself from the Friday prayers, or from the sermon he delivered on Mondays and Thursdays. In matters of Jurisprudence he was a Hanafite.

'Aly ibn Mahdy was succeeded by his son 'Abd an-Naby. The latter's brother 'Abd Allah rebelled against him and obtained possession of Zabīd, where the Khuṭbah, in which he received the title of Imām, was recited in his name. But 'Abd an-Naby succeeded after a time in overcoming him. He expelled him from the city, and made himself master of the whole of Yaman. There were at that time twenty-five separate governments in the country, all of which he conquered. Aden alone remained unconquered, and 'Abd an-Naby subjected it solely to the payment of tribute.

When Shams ad-Daulah Turān Shah ibn Ayyūb, brother of Saladin, invaded the country in A.H. 566 (read 569) and overthrew the government of Yaman, he seized 'Abd an-Naby, extorted from him such information as he required, and took from him a great amount of riches. He carried him to Aden, which he captured. Then he went to Zabīd and made it the seat of government. Conceiving ere long an unfavourable opinion of its salubrity, he made a journey to the mountains, accompanied by his physicians, for the purpose of selecting a spot with a healthy atmosphere and wholesome water, in which to establish his place of residence. Their choice fell upon the site of Ta'izz, where Turān Shah founded the city, which became the seat of government to himself, to his descendants (read to his successors of the Ayyubite family), and to their freedmen, the Banu Rasūl (who followed the Ayyubites), as we will relate in their history.

With the fall of the Banu Mahdy, Arab sovereignty came to an end in Yaman, and supreme rule was thenceforth held by the Ghuzz and by their freedmen.

THE PROVINCES AND CITIES OF YAMAN.

WE will now proceed to give a brief historical sketch of the capitals and cities of Yaman, one by one, as supplied by Ibn Sa'id.

YAMAN forms part of the Arabian Peninsula and comprises seven royal seats of government. It is divided into two parts. Tihāmah and al-Jibāl (the highlands). Tihāmah consists of two kingdoms, that of Zabīd and that of Aden. The name Tihāmah denotes the low country of Yaman adjoining the sea-coast and extending from as-Sirrayu on the borders of Hijāz, to the extremity of the province of Aden, round by the Indian Ocean. Ibn Sa'id states that the Arabian Peninsula is situated in the First Climate and that it is bounded by the Indian Ocean on the south, by the Sea of Suez on the west, and by the Persian Sea on the east. Yaman belonged in ancient days to the Tabābi'ah (the Tubbas). It is a more productive country than the Hijāz. Most of its inhabitants are descendants of Kaḥṭān, but it contains also people of the tribe of ‘Anz son of Wā’il.¹¹⁴ It is ruled at the present day by the Banu Rasūl, clients of the Banu Ayyūb, and their capital is Ta‘izz, which succeeded al-Jawwah, where the Rasūlites at first took up their abode. The Imām of the Zaydites resides at Ṣa‘dah in Yaman.

ZABĪD (named after its capital) is one of the kingdoms of Yaman. On its north is Hijāz, on the south the Indian Ocean, and on the west the Sea of Suez. The city was founded by Muḥammad ibn Ziyād in the days of al-Ma‘mūn, A.H. 204. It is enclosed in walls, and a stream of running water penetrates into the city, introduced by its kings. Close to it are low-lying grounds planted with palm trees, a spot resorted to during the dry season.* Zabīd is now part of the kingdom of the Banu Rasūl. It was formerly the seat of government of the Banu Ziyād and of their freedmen, and it was conquered by the Banu Ṣulayḥi, whose history has been related.

‘ATHTHAR, HALY and ASH-SHARJAH are provinces of Zabīd, in its northern part, and are known as pelled minions of Ibn Ṭarf. They extend over a distance of the whole even days’ journey by two days’, from twenty-five to Haly. From the latter to Mecca is of which he comney. ‘Aththar is the seat of government, conquered, and situated on the borders of the sea. the payment of ṭarf held the place against Abu ‘l-

Ghānim was succeeded by 'Isa the son of Ḥamzah, who was one of the sons of Ghānim. When the Ghuzz conquered Yaman, Yaḥya the brother of 'Isa was taken prisoner and carried to 'Irāk. 'Isa contrived to obtain his brother's release, and Yaḥya returned to Yaman, where he slew his brother and became ruler of the principality.

AL-MAḤJAM is one of the provinces of Zabīd, at a distance of three days' journey from that city. The Arabs who inhabit it belong to the tribes of Ḥakam and Ja'far (read Ju'fi?), two sub-divisions of the tribe of Sa'd al-'Ashīrah. Ginger is exported from that province.

AS-SIRRAYN is the furthestmost place of the Tihāmah of Yaman. It is on the borders of the sea, unwallled, and its houses are built of reeds. It was conquered about A.H. 650 by Rājih son of Kaṭādah, Sulṭān of Mecca, and he possessed a castle at half a day's journey from the town.

AZ-ZARĀ'IB is one of the provinces north of Zabīd. It belonged to Ibn Ṭarf. He was supported in that district by twenty thousand Abyssinians. When the Dā'y as-Ṣulayḥi arose, he attacked Ibn Ṭarf at az-Zarā'ib, with about three thousand men, put him to flight and killed all the Abyssinians that were with him.

Ibn Sa'īd says, speaking of the provinces of Zabīd and of those that border on the middle road between the sea and the mountains, that az-Zarā'ib stands on the Zabīd road, north of that city, and that the road is the great highway to Mecca. 'Omārah says that it is the royal highway, that it is distant a day's journey, or less, from the sea and at the same distance from the mountains, and that the two roads, the middle one and that running along the sea-shore, join and diverge at as-Sirrayn.

123 ADEN is one of the kingdoms of Yaman, south of Zabīd. The city is the seat of government, and it is situated on the shores of the Indian Ocean. It has been a place of trade since the days of the Tubbas. It is thirteen degrees distant from the equator. Its soil produces neither crops nor trees, and the food of its inhabitants consists of fish. It is the port of embarkation for India from Yaman. It was at first ruled by the descendants of Ma'n son of Zā'idah, who resisted the authority of the Banu Ziyād, but paid them tribute. When the Sulayḥites became supreme over the country, the Dā'y 'Aly confirmed the Banu Ma'n in their government. But his son Aḥmad al-Mukarram afterwards ejected them, and appointed over the country the Banu al-Karam, of the sub-tribe of Jusham son of Yām, his kinsmen, and like himself, descendants of Hamdān. The Banu Zuray', a family of the Banu Karam, became possessed of exclusive power, and they inherited the office of Dā'y held by the Sulayḥites, as well as their sovereignty, all which has already been related. 'Aly ibn Mahdy was not able to subdue the Zuray'ites, and he was obliged to content himself with the tribute they paid him, until they were conquered by Shams ad-Daulah Turān Shāh son of Ayyūb, as hereinbefore mentioned.

AZ-ZA'ĀZĪ' stands in the valleys of Aden, and belonged to the Banu Mas'ūd ibn al-Karam, the rivals of the Banu Zuray'.

AL-JAWWAH was built by the Zuray'ite kings in the neighbourhood of Aden. The Ayyubites made it their place of residence, but afterwards they removed to Ta'izz.

* See Note 11.

THE CASTLE OF DHU JIBLAH is one of the fortresses of the Mikhlāf of Ja'far. It was built by 'Abd Allah the Ṣulayḥite, brother of the Dā'y ('Aly), in A.H. 458. 'Aly's son al-Mukarram removed thither from the castle of Ṣan'ā together with his wife Sayyidah daughter of Aḥmad, who gained absolute control over her husband. It was she who completed the castle to its full height, in the year 480.

Al-Mukarram, before his death, had committed supreme authority, that of King and of Dā'y, to Sabā son of Aḥmad son of al-Muẓaffar the Ṣulayḥite, who occupied the castle of Ashyah. Sayyidah relied for support upon the chief of the Banu Janb, a people who, in pre-Islamitic days, were of small repute, but who gained a conspicuous position in the province of Ja'far. After a time Ibn Najīb ad-Daulah came from Egypt as Dā'y. He abode in the city of Janad and obtained support from the tribe of Hamdān. Sayyidah fought against him, aided by the Banu Janb and Khaulān, until he embarked at sea and was drowned. After the death of her husband al-Mukarram, her affairs were directed by al-Mufaḍḍal ibn Abi 'l-Barakāt, who established his influence over her.

AT-TA'KAR, in Mikhlāf Ja'far, belonged to the Banu Ṣulayḥi and subsequently to Sayyidah. Al-Mufaḍḍal ibn Abi 'l-Barakāt having asked for it, she delivered the place to him and he dwelt therein, until he went forth and besieged the Banu Najāh at Zabid. His absence prolonged itself, and certain faḳihs (Jurists) revolted at Ta'kar, killed al-Mufaḍḍal's deputy and proclaimed Ibrahīm ibn Zaydān, one of their number, who was uncle of 'Omārah the poet. They asked assistance of the Banu Khaulān, and al-Mufaḍḍal thereupon returned and besieged them, as we have already related.

THE FORTRESS OF KHUDAD (Khadid) belonged to 'Abd Allah ibn Ya'la the Ṣulayḥite, and is situated in the Mikhlāf (province) of Ja'far. Al-Mufaddal had introduced into the fortresses of the province, a large number of Khaulānites belonging to the tribes of Baḥr, Munabbih, Rizāḥ (Rāziḥ?) and Sha'b (Sha'b-Ḥay). When al-Mufaddal died, the Khaulānites seized the fortress of Ta'kar, but Dhu Jiblah continued in the possession of Maṣṣūr son of al-Mufaddal, under the guardianship of Sayyidah, as already related. Muslim ibn az-Zarr the Khaulānite suddenly arose and captured the fortress of Khudad from 'Abd Allah ibn Ya'la the Ṣulayḥite. 'Abd Allah fled to the fortress of Maṣḍūd and Sayyidah appointed Muslim ibn az-Zarr successor to al-Mufaddal. She acted with scrupulous good faith towards him and towards his two brothers (read sons) 'Imrān and Suleymān. He died and his son Suleymān succeeded him in the joint possession, along with Sayyidah, of the fortress of Khudad, replacing his brother (read his father) Muslim. She married him to the daughter of the Kā'id Faṭḥ, governor on her behalf of the fortress of Ta'kar, of which Suleymān contrived by treachery to dispossess him. The Khaulānites extended their hands (oppressively) over the people, and Sayyidah sought assistance against the two brothers from the Banu Janb. 'Imrān and Suleymān were the Queen's advisers, and it was they who by her orders expelled the Dā'y Najib ad-Daulah from the city of Janad and from Yaman.

125 (sic) THE FORTRESS OF MAṢḌŪD is one of the (great) fortresses of the province of Ja'far, which are five in number, namely, Dhu Jiblah, at-Ta'kar and Khudad. When the Banu Khaulān wrested Khudad from the hands of 'Abd Allah ibn Ya'la the Ṣulayḥite, he took refuge, as we have mentioned, in the fortress of Maṣḍūd. The Khaulānites took it from him likewise, but they were dispossessed by Zakarīya ibn Shakīr the Baḥrite.

The Banu Kurandi, descendants of Himyar, were Kings in Yaman before the days of the Sulayhites, and were dispossessed by the latter. They owned the province of Ja'far and its fortresses, the province of Ma'afir, that of Janad, of Haḍ,* and the fortress of Samadān.

The fortress of Maṣdūd was afterwards held by Manṣūr son of al-Mufaḍḍal son of Abu 'l-Barakāt, who sold it to the Banu Zuray', as already mentioned.

ṢAN'Ā was the capital of the dynasty of the Tubbas before the days of Islām, and was the first city built in Yaman. It is said to have been built by 'Ād, and it was called Uwāl (or Uwwāl), signifying primacy, in the dialect of the country.¹¹⁶ Kaṣr Ghumdān, in its neighbourhood, was one of the seven temples. It was built by aḍ-Ḍahḥāk and dedicated to Zuhrah.† It was an object of pilgrimage, and was destroyed by 'Othmān (the third Khalifah). Ṣan'ā is the most celebrated city of Yaman. It possesses, it is said, a temperate climate. At the commencement of the fourth century, it was subject to the Banu Ya'fur, a family dating from the days (descendants?) of the Tubbas, but they resided at Kaḥlān, and Ṣan'ā did not acquire celebrity as a royal seat (at that period), until it became the residence of the Banu Sulayhi. It was conquered by the Zaydites and then by the Suleymānites, after it had been held by the Sulayhites.

THE CASTLE OF KAḤLĀN is one of the dependencies of Ṣan'ā, and it belonged to the Banu Ya'fur, a family (descendants?) of the Tubbas.‡ It was built near Ṣan‘ā by Ibrahīm (son of Muḥammad son of Ya‘fur), who possessed Ṣa‘dah, Ṣan‘ā, Najrān and other places in the highlands of Yaman. The Banu ‘r-Rassy, the Zaydite Imāms, made war upon the Banu Ya‘fur and conquered Ṣa‘dah and Najrān. The Banu Ya‘fur had recourse, for protection against their enemies, to the walls of the castle of Kaḥlān. Al-Bayḥaqī says that the castle was strengthened by As‘ad ibn Ya‘fur and that he fought against the Banu ‘r-Rassy and against the Banu Ziyād in the days of Abu ‘l-Jaysh Ishāk.

THE FORTRESS OF AS-SAMADĀN is also a dependency of Ṣan‘ā. It contained the treasury of the Banu ‘l-Kurandi the Himyarites, until the fortress was taken by ‘Aly aṣ-Ṣulayḥī. Al-Mukarram restored 126 to them some of their fortresses, which they held until they were deprived of power by ‘Aly ibn Mahdy. They possessed the province of Ja‘far, in which the city of Dhu Jiblah and the fortress of at-Ta‘kar are situated. The Mikhlāf Ja‘far consists of the provinces of Janad and of Ma‘āfir. The seat of government of the Banu Kurandi was Samadān, a fortress stronger than Dumlūwah.

THE CASTLE OF MINHĀB is one of the castles dependent upon Ṣan‘ā, situated in the highlands. It was taken by the Banu Zuray‘ and was appropriated by a member of that family, al-Mufaddal, son of ‘Aly son of Rāḍī son of the Dā‘y Muḥammad son of Sabā son of Zuray‘. The author of the *Kharīdah*¹¹⁶ gives him the title of Sulṭān. He further mentions that al-Mufaddal was owner of the castle of Minhāb and that he was alive in the year 586. After his death the castle passed into the possession of his brother al-A‘azz ibn ‘Aly.

MOUNT AL-MUDHAYKHIRAH is near Ṣan‘ā. The province of Ja‘far was founded by Ja‘far, freedman of Ibn Ziyād Sulṭān of Yaman, and was named after him.

‘ADEN-LĀ‘AH is close to al-Mudhaykhirah.* It is the place in which the Shī‘ah doctrines were first openly preached in Yaman. The Dā‘y Muḥammad (read ‘Aly) ibn al-Faḍl was a native of ‘Aden-Lā‘ah, and it was to that place that Abu ‘Abd Allah ash-Shīya‘i, the Ismailite missionary to North Africa, came. It was there also that ‘Aly son of Muḥammad the Sulayḥite studied in the days of his youth. ‘Aden-Lā‘ah was the chief centre for the propagation of the Ismailite doctrines in Yaman. Muḥammad (‘Aly) ibn al-Faḍl was the Dā‘y in the days of Abu ‘l-Jaysh ibn Ziyād and of As‘ad ibn Ya‘fur.

BAYḤĀN is mentioned by ‘Omārah among other districts in the mountains.† It was possessed by Nashwān ibn Sa‘īd the Kaḥṭānite (and Ḥimyarite).

TA‘IZZ is one of the greatest of the mountain fortresses that overlook Tihāmah. It has always been one of the royal strongholds. It is now the seat of the Rasūlite dynasty, and it is regarded as one of the chief cities of their kingdom. Among other Yamanite kings by whom it was inhabited, was Maṣṣūr son of al-Mufaddal son of Abu ‘l-Barakāt, of the family of the Sulayḥites (read the Ḥimyarite). His father was (became) possessed of Ashyah and made himself master of the fortresses owned by the Banu Abi ‘l-Barakāt and by the Banu ‘l-Muḥaffar. His son Maṣṣūr inherited them, but sold them one after the other to the Dā‘y the son of al-Muḥaffar and to the Zuray‘ite Dā‘y (read, sold them to the Dā‘y Muḥammad ibn Sabā the Zuray‘ite), until none remained to him but Ta‘izz, of which he was deprived by Ibn Mahdy.

THE FORTRESS OF ASHYAH is one of the greatest of the mountain strongholds, and it contained the treasures of the Banu Muḥaffar. It was owned by the Dā‘y al-Maṣṣūr Abu Ḥimyar Sabā son of Aḥmad son of al-Muḥaffar the Sulayḥite, to whom it was bequeathed by the son of his paternal uncle al-Mukarram, Lord of Dhu Jiblah. (The Egyptian Khalīfah) al-Mustanşir appointed him supreme Dā'y, and he died in A.H. 486 (read 492). His son 'Aly gained possession of the royal fortress of Ashyah. Al-Mufaddal was unable to prevail against him, but eventually contrived an artifice whereby he brought about his rival's death by poison, and the fortresses of the Banu Muẓaffar passed into the possession of the family of Abu 'l-Barakāt. Al-Mufaddal died and was succeeded by his son Maṣṣūr. The latter after a time disdained the kingdom bequeathed to him by his father and sold all its fortresses. He parted with Dhu Jiblah to the Zuray'ite Dā'y, Prince of Aden, for one hundred thousand dinārs. He sold also the fortress of Şabir, after having sworn the oath of divorce that he would not do so. His wife was consequently divorced from him and was taken in marriage by the Zuray'ite. Maṣṣūr enjoyed a long life. He succeeded to the throne at the age of twenty and reigned for eighty (thirty?) years.* The fortress of Ta'izz was taken from him by 'Aly ibn Mahdy.

ŞA'DAH is a kingdom adjoining that of Şan'ā and situated on the east thereof. It contains three seats of government, Şa'dah, Jabal Kuṭābah † and the fortress of Thulā, besides other strongholds. The entire country is known as that of the Banu 'r-Rassy, whose history we have already related (infra, p. 184).

THE FORTRESS OF THULĀ is the place that first witnessed the rise of al-Mūṭi, who restored to the Banu 'r-Rassy the Zaydite Imāmate, of which they had been deprived by the Banu Suleymān.‡ The adherents of the Rassites withdrew to Jabal Kuṭābah, and in the year 645 they swore allegiance to Aḥmad al-Mūṭi. He was a Jurist and a pious man. Nūr ad-Dīn ('Omar) ibn Rasūl besieged him in the fortress for a year. He collected troops for the purpose of (renewing?) the siege, but he died in A.H. 648 (read 647). His son al-Muẓaffar (Yūsuf) became absorbed in the siege of ad-Dumlūwah, whilst al-Mūṭi acquired great power and became possessed of the fortresses of Yaman. He marched upon Ṣa'dah and the Suleymānites, whose Imām, as has been related in the history of the Banu Rassy,* was Aḥmad al-Mutawakkil, swore allegiance to him.

ḲUṬĀBAH is a lofty mountain on the east of Ṣa'dah, upon which stands a castle and villages.¹¹⁷ The Banu 'l-Hādi made it their place of refuge when the Suleymānites took Ṣa'dah from them, and there happened that which we have related.

ḤARĀZ and MASĀR. Ḥarāz is part of the country of the tribe of Hamdān, and it is also the name of one of their sub-tribes, to which aṣ-Ṣulayḥi belonged,¹¹⁸ whilst the fortress of Masār, in the district of Ḥarāz, is the place where he first manifested himself. Al-Bayhaḳi says (of the Banu Hamdān) that their country is in the eastern (read western) portion of the highlands of Yaman.† They became dispersed after the appearance of Islām, and there are now no wandering communities of the Banu Hamdān elsewhere but in Yaman. They are the greatest tribe of Yaman. It was with their support that al-Mūṭi rose to eminence. They became masters of several fortresses in the highlands, where they possess the districts of the Banu Bakīl and Banu Hāshid, the two sons of Jusham, son of Ḥabwān (read Khaywān) son of Nauf son of Hamdān. Ibn Ḥazm ‡ says that the sub-tribes of Hamdān branch forth from Bakīl and Hāshid. End of the quotation (from al-Bayhaḳi). To the tribe of Hamdān belonged the family of Zuray', who exercised sovereignty and held the office of Dā'y at Aden and at al-Juwwah. The Banu Yām, the tribe of the Sulayhites, are one of the subdivisions of the Banu Hamdān. The Banu Hamdān are Shi'ahs. At the present time they carry heresy in their country to an extreme, and most of them are Zaydites.

THE COUNTRY OF (the BANU) KHAULĀN, according to al-Bayhaḳi, is situated in the east of the highlands of Yaman, adjoining the country of the Banu Hamdān. The Khaulānites possess the strongest fortresses of the highlands and of Mikhlāf Ja'far. They invaded the province of Ja'far in the days of the Sulayhite dynasty, and the Banu 'z-Zarr, who were members of the tribe, possessed themselves of the fortresses of Khudad, of Ta'kar and of others. The Banu Khaulān and the Banu Hamdān are the greatest tribes in Yaman. The Khaulānites have many sub-tribes, and they dispersed themselves throughout the countries of Islām, but at the present time not a tent of the tribe is to be found elsewhere but in Yaman.

129 THE DISTRICT OF THE BANU AṢBAḤ is situated in Wādi (valley of the) Saḥūl. Dhu Aṣbaḥ, from whom they claim descent, has been mentioned in tracing the genealogy of the Tubbas and Aḳyāl (kings, descendants of Ḥimyar).

THE DISTRICT OF YAḤṢUB borders upon that of the Banu Aṣbaḥ. Yaḥṣub and Aṣbaḥ were brothers.

THE DISTRICT OF THE BANU WĀ'IL. The chief city of this province is Shāḥiṭ. Its ruler was As'ad ibn Wā'il and the Banu Wā'il are a tribe of Dhu 'l-Kalā'. The latter are descended from (Ḥimyar and) Sabā. They conquered the country upon the death of al-Ḥasan (Ḥusayn) ibn Salāmah, governor of the highlands on behalf of the Banu Najāḥ (read Ziyād).

THE DISTRICT OF YARBŪ' is in the highlands. It was conquered by the Banu 'Abd al-Wāhid after the death of Ḥasan (Ḥusayn) ibn Salāmah. The inhabitants of the country had seized the frontier places. They were attacked by Ḥasan (Ḥusayn) ibn Salāmah, who made war upon them until they submitted. He built the city of al-Kadrā on the Mikhlāf (read river) Sahām and that of al-Ma'ḳir on the river Dhu'āl. He died in A.H. 402.

THE COUNTRY OF THE BANU KINDAH is in the portion of the highlands of Yaman that borders upon Ḥaḍramaut and upon Abjar and ar-Raml. The Banu Kindah were ruled by a dynasty of kings, and their capital was Dammūn, which is mentioned by Imru 'l-Kays in his poems.*

THE COUNTRY OF MADHḤIJ adjoins the mountainous district of al-Janad, and it is inhabited by the Banu 'Ans, Zubayd and Murād, sub-tribes of the Banu Madhḥij. A portion of the Banu 'Ans are in North Africa, allied with the native wandering tribes. The Banu Ḥurab, a subdivision (read kinsmen) of the Banu Zubayd, inhabit the country between Mecca and Medinah in Ḥijāz. The Banu Zubayd of Syria and Mesopotamia are a subdivision of the tribe of Ṭa'y, and do not belong to the tribe here in question.

THE COUNTRY OF THE BANU NAHD lies in the hollows of the Sarawāt and so also Tabālah. The Sarawāt (plural of Sarāt) are (the chain of mountains) between Tihāmah on the one side, and the highlands of Yaman and of Ḥijāz on the other. They bear a resemblance to the back (sarāt) of a horse. The Banu Nahd are derived from Ḳudā'ah, and they settled in Yaman in the neighbourhood of the Banu Khath'am. The Banu Nahd are like wild beasts, and the vulgar call them as-Sarwa. Most of them are a mixed race, partly descended from the Banu Khath'am and Bajilah.

TABĀLAH is in the country of the Banu Nahd, and it is inhabited by a people possessed of considerable power; who belong to the tribe of 'Anz ibn Wā'il. This is the place of which al-Hajjāj was appointed ruler, and which he disdained and relinquished.

THE COUNTRIES ADJOINING YAMAN.

AL-YAMĀMAH is the first. Al-Bayhaqi says that it is a separate country with its own rulers, but the actual fact is that it is part of Ḥijāz, precisely as Najrān is part of Yaman. Such is also the opinion of Ibn Hauḳal. Yamāmah, as a kingdom, is inferior to Ḥijāz.* Its territory is called al-'Arūd, on account of its interposing between Ḥijāz and Baḥrayn. On the east it is bounded by Baḥrayn; on the west by the outlying extremities of Yaman and Ḥijāz; on the south by Najrān, and on the north by the Najd (highlands) of Ḥijāz. It is twenty days' journey in length, and it is four days distant from Mecca. Its capital is Ḥajr, written with fath. The city of Yamāmah was the seat of kings before the days of the Banu Ḥanīfah. The latter afterwards adopted Ḥajr as their place of residence. Between the two cities is a distance of a day and a night's journey. The high-lying portions of the country are inhabited by sections of the tribesmen of Yarbū', derived from the Banu Tamīm, and of Banu 'Ijl. Al-Bakri says its name was Jaww, and that it was named after Zarkā 'l-Yamāmah, by the last Tubba' (read by Ḥassān ibn Tubba'). It is situated, as well as Mecca, in the Second Climate, * de Goeje's ed. p. 18. There seems reason to suspect an error here, perhaps committed by Ibn Khaldūn himself. Ibn Hauḳal writes, speaking of the chief city of Yamāmah فهى دون مدينة رسول الله (p. 26). See also the corresponding passages in Iṣṭakhri, pp. 14 and 18.

and the two cities are equally distant from the equator. Among the inhabited places of Yamāmah are Tūḍih and Karkara.* According to aṭ-Ṭabari, Raml 'Ālij is between Yamāmah and ash-Shiḥr. It is a country of nomads. Yamāmah and Ṭā'if belonged formerly to the Banu Hizzān son of Ya'fur son of Saksak. The tribes of Ṭasm and Jadīs conquered the country, but were eventually overcome by the Banu Hizzān, who thenceforward ruled over Yamāmah, with the Banu Ṭasm and Jadīs, as their dependants. The last king of the Banu Hizzān was Kūrṭ son of Ja'far. Upon his death, the Ṭasmites possessed themselves of supreme power. 'Amlik, whose history is well known, was one of the tribe. The supremacy of the Ṭasmites was followed by that of the Banu Jadīs. Al-Yamāmah, 31 after whom the city of Jaww was named, belonged to that tribe. Her history is well known. Yamāmah was next conquered by the Banu Ḥanīfah. Of them was Haudhah son of 'Aly, King of Yamāmah. He wore a crown, or according to other accounts, jewels strung together, none of the descendants of Ma'add having ever made use of a crown. After Haudhah, Thumāmah ibn Uthāl reigned over Yamāmah in the days of the Prophet. He was taken prisoner, adopted Islām, and continued steadfast in the faith throughout the days of apostacy. Musaylimah (the false prophet), whose history is well known, likewise belonged to the tribe of Ḥanīfah. Ibn Sa'id reports having asked the Arabs of Baḥrayn and certain members of the tribe of Madhḥij, to what people Yamāmah belonged in his day. He was told in reply, that it was in the possession of Arab tribes descended from Kayṣ 'Aylān, and that the fame of the Banu Ḥanīfah had perished throughout the country.¹¹⁹

ated, says Ibn Haukal, eastward of Aden on the borders of the sea.* The chief city of Ḥaḍramaut is small, but its provinces are of wide extent. It is separated from Aden on the one side, and from 'Oman on the other, by sandy wastes known by the name of the Aḥkaf (sand heaps). It was the dwelling-place of 'Ād, and it contains the tomb of Hūd, upon whom be peace. In its midst is the mountain of Shabām (Shibām). Ḥaḍramaut is situated in the First Climate and twelve degrees distant from the equator. It is reckoned as part of Yaman. It is a cultivated country and is planted with palms and other trees. Most of its inhabitants uphold the supremacy of the descendants of 'Aly and Fāṭimah, but they abhor 'Aly for having consented to submit his rights to human judgment. The largest city of Ḥaḍramaut in the present day is the fortress of Shibām, in which the horses of the king are kept. Along with ash-Shiḥr and 'Omān, it originally belonged to 'Ād, from whose people it was conquered by the Banu Ya'rub son of Ḳaḥṭān. It is said that (the Banu) 'Ād were led to the Arabian Peninsula (to Ḥaḍramaut?) by Ruḳaym son of Aram (Ruḳaym son of 'Abir son of 'Ād?), who had formerly visited the country in company with the Prophet Hūd. He returned to the people of 'Ād and led them in ships to the country and to its invasion. They wrested it from the hands of its inhabitants, but they were themselves subsequently conquered by the Banu Ya'rub son of Ḳaḥṭān.¹²⁰ Ḳaḥṭān ruled over the country, and it was governed by his son Ḥaḍramaut, after whom it was named.

132 ASH-SHIḤR is, like Hijāz and Yaman, one of the kingdoms of the Arabian Peninsula. It is separate from Ḥaḍramaut and 'Oman. Ash-Shiḥr is so named after its capital. There is no cultivation, neither are there palm trees in the country. The wealth of the inhabitants consists in camels and goats. Their food is flesh, preparations of milk and small fish, with which they also feed their beasts. The country is also known as that of Mahrah, and the camels called Mahrīyah camels are reared in it.* Ash-Shiḥr is sometimes conjoined with ‘Omān, but it is contiguous to Ḥaḍramaut and it has been described as constituting the shores of that country. It produces frankincense (lubān, olibanum), and on the sea-shore the Shiḥrite ambergris is found. It is bounded on the east and on the west (south?) by the shores of the Indian Ocean, on which Aden is situated, on the east (also?) by ‘Omān. The Indian Ocean extends along the south and on the north Ḥaḍramaut, as if Shiḥr were the sea-shore of the latter. Both belong to one king. Shiḥr is situated in the First Climate and it is hotter than Ḥaḍramaut. It belonged in ancient times to the people of ‘Ād, who were succeeded by the tribe of Mahrah, descended from Ḥaḍramaut, or according to other accounts, from Ḳuḍā‘ah. The people who inhabit these sandy deserts are like wild beasts, and their religion is that of the Khārijites, according to the tenets of its branch sect, the Ibādites.†

The first of the Ḳaḥṭānites who settled in Shiḥr was Mālīk son of Ḥimyar. He revolted against his brother Wā‘il (or Wāthil), who was king at Ḳaṣr Ghumdān. A lengthened war endured between them, and Mālīk died. He was succeeded by his son Ḳuḍā‘ah. Saksak son of Wā‘il continued the war, until he subdued his enemy, and Ḳuḍā‘ah was restricted to the possession of the country of Mahrah. He was succeeded by his son al-Ḥāf, who was followed by Mālīk son of al-Ḥāf. The latter removed to ‘Omān, where he thenceforward reigned.

† See Mas‘udi, vol. vi. p. 67.

Al-Bayhākī says that Mahrah son of Ḥaydan son of ('Amru son of) al-Ḥāf reigned over the countries of Ḳudā'ah, and made war upon his paternal uncle Mālik son of al-Ḥāf, Prince of 'Omān, and conquered that province. These people are now no longer borne in remembrance beyond the limits of their own country.

MIRBĀT and ZAFĀR, of the same measure as the word nazāl, are two cities of Shihir.* Zafār was the seat of empire of the Tubbas, and Mirbāt was situated on the sea-shore. Both cities are now in ruins. Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad ibn Maḥmūd al-¹³³Ḥimyarī, who bore the surname al-Bākhūdah (al-Ḥamūḍī ?), was a wealthy merchant. He obtained access to the prince of Mirbāt with his merchandise, and gained his confidence. After a time the prince appointed him to the office of wazīr, and upon his death Aḥmad al-Bākhūdah (al-Ḥamūḍī) obtained possession of the throne. In the year 619 he destroyed the cities of Mirbāt and Zafār, and he built on the sea-coast the city of Zufār, written with the wāw z moved by ḍamm, which he surnamed al-It is ṣayāḥ after himself. Yaman. Some of the Arab people made it an object of pilgrimage and a place for sacrifices. It was known by the name of ad-Dayr (the Convent). Kuss ibn Sā'idah was in the habit of worshipping at the place.¹²² The Kaḥṭānites who settled in the country were a section of the Banu Jurhum, but it was afterwards conquered by the Banu Ḥimyar. They governed the country under the authority of the Tubbas. The rulers bore successively the title of al-Af'ā (the Viper). One of the Af'ā of Najrān bore the name of al-Falammas (Kalammas ?) son of 'Amru son of Hamdān son of Mālik son of Muntāb son of Zayd son of Wā'il son of Ḥimyar. He was a diviner, and it was to him that the sons of Nizār resorted and referred their dispute, as is mentioned in this work. Al-Falammas was governor of Najrān on behalf of Bilqis. She sent him to Suleymān, upon whom be peace. He became a believer and spread the Jewish faith among his people. He lived to a great age. It is said that both Baḥrayn and al-Mushallal belonged to him.¹²³

Al-Bayhaḳi says that the Banu Madhḥij next invaded Najrān and conquered it. Of them were the Banu 'l-Ḥārith son of Ka'b. Another authority relates that when the Yamanites went forth on the occasion of the floods of al-'Arim, they passed through Najrān. They were attacked by the Banu Madhḥij, and it was there that they became dispersed. Ibn Ḥazm says that the tribe of al-Ḥārith ibn Ka'b ibn 'Abd Allah ibn Mālik ibn Naṣr ibn al-Azd settled, under a peaceful agreement, in the neighbourhood of the Banu Madhḥij. Afterwards they wrested the country from the Banu Madhḥij and held sway over it. Christianity was introduced into Najrān through the means of Faymūn (Faymiyyūn), whose history is commonly found in biographical works.¹²⁴ The rulership over Najrān by the Banu 'l-Ḥārith the Madhḥijites descended to the Banu 'd-Dayyān (Rayyān?) and to the posterity of 'Abd al-Madān (son of Dayyān). Yazīd (son of 'Abd al-Madān), who lived in the days of the Prophet (whom God bless and hail with salutations of peace), made the profession of Islām to Khālīd ibn al-Walīd. He came as envoy to the Prophet with others of his people, but is not mentioned by Ibn 'Abd al-Barr, and this is an amendment of that writer's omission.¹²⁵ Yazīd's nephew Ziyād, the son of his brother 'Abd Allah ibn 'Abd al-Madān,* was maternal uncle of (the Khalīfah Abu 'l-'Abbās) as-Saffāh, who appointed him governor of Najrān and Yamāmah. He left two sons, Muḥammad and Yahya. The fourth century commenced with supreme authority exercised by the family of Abu 'l-Jūd ibn 'Abd al-Madān and rulership continued in their hands. War repeatedly arose between them and the Fatimites of Egypt, who at times dispossessed them of Najrān. The last of the dynasty was 'Abd al-Ḳays, who was deposed by 'Aly ibn Mahdy. He is mentioned and eulogized by 'Omārah.¹²⁶

And unto God, be He extolled and magnified, belongeth perfect knowledge of the truth.

THE ZAYDITE IMĀMS AT SA'DAH, THE RISE OF THEIR DYNASTY AND ITS VICISSITUDES.

WE have herein before given an account of Muḥammad ibn Ibrahīm, he whose father bore the surname of Ṭabāṭabā, the son of Isma'il son of Ibrahīm son of Ḥasan the second, (son of Ḥasan son of 'Aly), of his revolt in the days of al-Ma'mūn, of his recognition by Abu Sarāya and of all that relates to him. Upon his death and upon the death of Abu Sarāya, and upon the failure of their enterprise, al-Ma'mūn issued an order for the arrest of Muḥammad's brother al-Kāsim ar-Rassy, son of Ibrahīm Ṭabātabā. He fled to Sind, where he remained until his death in A.H. 245. His son al-Ḥasan (read Ḥusayn) returned to Yaman, and of his posterity were the Imāms of Ṣa'dah in Yaman, where they founded a Zaydite dynasty, which has endured to the present day.¹²⁷

* Read Ziyād, descendant of Yazīd's brother, was, etc.

Ṣa'dah is a mountain east (sic) of Ṣan'ā, on which are many fortresses, the most celebrated of which are Ṣa'dah, the fortress of Tula (Thula), and the mountain of Kuṭābah. The whole of that country is named after the Banu Rassy. Yaḥya son of al-Ḥusayn son of al-Kāsim ar-Rassy was the member of the family who first rose to eminence. He proclaimed himself at Ṣa'dah, adopted the surname of al-Hādy, and received oaths of allegiance in A.H. 288, during the lifetime of his father al-Ḥusayn. He collected a force consisting of his sectaries and other persons, and attacked Ibrahīm ibn Ya'fur, or according to other authorities As'ad ibn Ya'fur, who had arisen at Ṣan'ā and at Kaḥlān (?), and who was a descendant of the Tubbas. Al-Hādy seized upon Ṣan'ā and Najrān, ruled over them and struck coinage in his own name. But the Banu Ya'fur soon again wrested these places from him, whereupon he returned to Ṣa'dah, and died in A.H. 298, after a reign of ten years. Such are the particulars given by Ibn al-Mujāb. He adds that Yaḥya was the author of works treating of things lawful and unlawful. According to other statements, he was an assiduous investigator of religious law. He held doubtful opinions on questions of Jurisprudence, and was the author of books that are well known among the dissentient sects.

Aṣ-Ṣūli¹²⁸ says that he was succeeded by his son Muḥammad surnamed al-Murtaḍa. The people rose against him, and he perished in the year 320, after a reign of twenty-two years. He was succeeded by his brother an-Nāṣir Aḥmad, whose authority was firmly established and passed on to his children after him.

His successor was his son Ḥusayn al-Muntakhab, who died A.H. 324, and he was succeeded by his brother al-Kāsim al-Mukhtār, who reigned until he was slain by Abu 'l-Kāsim ad-Ḍaḥḥāk, the Hamdānite, in A.H. 344.

Aṣ-Ṣūli says that the sons of an-Nāṣir who succeeded to the throne were ar-Rashīd, al-Muntakhab, al-Mukhtār and al-Mahdy.* Ibn Ḥazm, in speaking of the descendants of Abu 'l-Kāsim (read al-Kāsim) ar-Rassy, says as follows:—"Among others of his posterity there were the princes who ruled at Ṣa'dah in Yaman. The first was Yaḥya al-Hādy, who held opinions on Jurisprudence which I have investigated. They are not widely or fundamentally different from the received doctrines. His father (read, his son) Aḥmad an-Nāṣir had several sons, of whom the following ruled over Ṣa'dah after him, namely, Ja'far ar-Rashīd, next after him his brother al-Kāsim al-Mukhtār, then al-Ḥasan al-Muntakhab and Muḥammad al-Mahdy.† The Yamanite

* For al-Mukhtār, see Note 8 (footnote). The other three names are not mentioned by the author of the Hadā'ik, although he enumerates the sons and daughters of an-Nāṣir. See next footnote.

† The names of an-Nāṣir's sons, as given by the author of the Hadā'ik, were al-Kāsim Abu Muḥammad (al-Mukhtār), Isma'īl, Ḥasan, Ja'far, Yaḥya and 'Alī. The name al-Mahdy Muḥammad, cited in the text, may perhaps be referred to the Persian Imām, who died in Tabaristān A.H. 360. But he was a descendant of al-Kāsim son of Ḥasan, and not a member of the Rassite family. See the genealogical table, Note 107.

who was at Merida in 343 styled himself 'Abdallah son of Aḥmad an-Nāṣir brother of ar-Rashīd, of al-Mukhtār, of al-Muntakhab and al-Mahdy."

Ibn al-Mujāb says that the succession to the Imāmate of the Banu Rassy continued until dissensions arose among them. The Suleymānites came from Mecca, on being expelled by the Hāshimītes. They conquered Ṣa'dah, and the dominion of the Banu Rassy came to an end in the sixth century.*

Ibn Sa'īd relates that among the members of the family of the Banu Suleymān, there was at the time of their removal from Mecca to Yaman, Aḥmad son of Ḥamzah son of Suleymān.† The people of Zabīd besought his assistance against 'Alī ibn Mahdy the Khārijite, who was besieging the city, then under the rule of Fātik ibn Muḥammad, of the dynasty of Najāh. He consented on condition of their slaying Fātik, which they accordingly did in A.H. 553. They raised Aḥmad ibn Ḥamzah (Suleymān) to the throne, but being unable to withstand the power of 'Alī ibn Mahdy, he fled from Zabīd and the city was taken by Ibn Mahdy. Ibn Sa'īd adds that 'Īsa son of Ḥamzah, brother of Aḥmad, possessed 'Aththar, one of the fortresses of Yaman.‡ Another member of the family was Ghānim son of Yaḥya. Then the power of the Suleymānites perished throughout the whole of Tibāmah, throughout the highlands, and throughout Yaman, at the hands of the Banu Mahdy. Next afterwards the Ayyūbites conquered these countries and held the Suleymānites in subjection. The Suleymānite sovereignty was lastly held by al-Manṣūr ‘Abd Allah son of Aḥmad son of Ḥamzah.* Ibn al-‘Adīm,¹²⁹ says that he inherited the throne at Ṣa‘dah from his father. He displayed a hostile demeanour towards the ‘Abbaside Khālifah an-Nāṣir (A.H. 575—622), with whom he affected a tone of equality, and he sent his Dā‘ys to the Daylamites and to Jilān, with the result that the Khuṭbah was recited among these people in his name, and that he appointed governors over them. An-Nāṣir endeavoured to raise the Arabs of Yaman against al-Manṣūr by means of subventions, but could not prevail against him.

Ibn al-Athīr says that al-Manṣūr ‘Abd Allah, son of Aḥmad son of Ḥamzah, Imām of the Zaydites at Ṣa‘dah, collected troops in A.H. 592 and marched upon Yaman. Al-Mu‘izz son of Sayf al-Islām Tuḡtakīn ibn Ayyūb was filled with alarm, but went forth to meet him, and put him to flight. Al-Manṣūr again collected, in A.H. 612, an army composed of Hamdānites and Khaulānites. Great agitation was produced in Yaman, and (the Ayyūbite Sultān al-Mas‘ūd (Ṣalāḥ ad-dīn Yūsuf) son of al-Kāmil, at that time sovereign of the country, was filled with apprehension. He had Kurdish and Turkish troops, and the commander-in-chief, ‘Omar ibn Rasūl, recommended promptitude of action, ere the enemy could gain possession of the fortresses. Disputes broke out among the followers of al-Manṣūr, and on being attacked by al-Mas‘ūd his army was routed.

Al-Manṣūr died in A.H. 630 at an advanced age.† He left a son named Aḥmad, whom the Zaydites raised to the throne. They did not recognize him as Imām, but they waited for the increase of his years and for evidence that in his character he fulfilled the requisite conditions. In A.H. 645, certain Zaydites, inhabiting the fortress of Tula (Thula), proclaimed allegiance to al-Mūṭi, a member of the Rassite family. His name was Aḥmad ibn al-Husayn, a descendant of al-Hādy. When the Banu Rassy were driven from the seat of their Imāmate at Ṣa'dah by the Suleymānites, they took refuge on the mountain of Kuṭābah, east of Ṣa'dah (sic). There they remained, and members of the family successively and uninterruptedly exercised the office of Imām, publicly asserting their right to supreme authority. This continued until the Zaydites recognized Aḥmad al-Mūṭi.

He was a highly trained jurist, learned in the doctrines of his sect, constant in prayer and assiduous in fasting. He received the oaths of fealty in A.H. 645.

His career raised apprehension in the mind of Nūr ad-dīn 'Omar ibn Rasūl. He besieged al-Mūṭi in the fortress of Tula (Thula) for a year, but the Imām was successful in his defence. Nūr ad-dīn relinquished the siege, and set about collecting troops from the neighbouring fortresses for the purpose of resuming it. He was assassinated (A.H. 647), and his son al-Muẓaffar (who succeeded him) devoted his efforts exclusively to the fortress of Dumlūwah. Al-Mūṭi increased in power. He made himself master of twenty fortresses, then marched upon Ṣa'dah and wrested it from the hands of the Suleymānites.

They had proclaimed Aḥmad, son of their Imām 'Abd Allah al-Manṣūr, and upon al-Mūṭi being recognized as Imām at Thula, they gave Aḥmad the surname of al-Mutawakkil. They had waited for his advance in years, but on al-Mūṭi receiving oaths of allegiance, they recognized Aḥmad as Imām. When al-Mūṭi took Ṣa'dah, Aḥmad al-Mutawakkil went down to him, swore allegiance and placed himself under his protection. This was in the year 649. In 650 he went on the pilgrimage, and the Zaydites of Sa'dah continued under the authority of the descendants of al-Mūṭi.¹³⁰

I was informed in Egypt that the Imām of Sa'dah, previously to A.H. 780, was 'Aly ibn Muḥammad, a descendant of the family. He died before that date and was succeeded by his son Ṣalāḥ, who received the oaths of allegiance from the Zaydites. Some of them maintained that he was not a lawful Imām, by reason of his not possessing the qualifications required in the holder of the office. He was in the habit of answering that he was prepared to be whatever they chose, Imām if they pleased, and if not, Sultān. Ṣalāḥ died at the end of A.H. 793 and was succeeded by his son Najāḥ. The Zaydites refused to recognize him, whereupon he said that he rendered account to God alone. This is what we heard in Egypt, touching the Zaydites, during our sojourn in that country.

And God is the Inheritor of the earth and of all that therein is.

KARMATHIANS IN YAMAN, EXTRACTED FROM THE KITĀB AS-SULŪK, OF
BAHĀ 'D-DĪN AL-JANADI.

IN the days of As'ad ibn Ya'fur, the Karmathians appeared in Yaman, 'Aly ibn Faḍl in the country of Yāfi', and Maṣṣūr ibn Ḥasan, who was known under the designation of Maṣṣūr al-Yaman.¹³¹

I will now, therefore, briefly relate their history, as it has been told by Abu 'Abd Allah Muḥammad ibn Mālīk ibn Abi 'l-Ḳabā'il, a Jurist of Yaman and a learned Sunnite. He was one of the persons who joined the Karmathian sect in the days of aṣ-Ṣulayḥi, and he acquired a thorough knowledge of its character. On becoming convinced of the depravity of the Karmathian doctrines, he abjured them, and he composed a celebrated treatise, in which he has described the principles upon which they are founded, he demonstrates their wickedness and warns his readers against their deceptions.

'Aly ibn Faḍl, he says, was an Arab of the tribe named al-Aḥdūn (Ajdūn?), who trace their descent from Dhu Ḥadan (Dhu Jadan?).¹³² He was a Shi'ite of the Dodekite sect. He went on a pilgrimage to Mecca, and thence he went forth with the pilgrim caravan of 'Irāk, for the purpose of visiting the tomb of Ḥusayn (son of 'Aly). On reaching it he began uttering lamentations and cried aloud, saying: "Would that (I had been) one of thy companions, O son of the Prophet, when the hosts of the wicked came forth against thee!"

Maymūn was in charge of the mausoleum and his son 'Obayd was with him as assistant.¹³³ When they beheld the condition of Ibn Faḍl, they were filled with the desire to enlist him in their service. Maymūn spoke to him in private and made known unto Ibn Faḍl that his son 'Obayd was destined to be the founder of a dynasty, which would be an inheritance unto his descendants, but that this thing could come to pass only after being prepared for in Yaman, at the hands of certain of his missionaries (dā'ys). "That may well be accomplished in Yaman," answered Ibn Faḍl, "for ingenuity in the conduct of affairs is general among its people." Maymūn ordered him to remain and to wait until 140 he had considered the matter.

Maymūn was originally a Jew, who regarded Islām with envy. With the object of protecting his own religion, he made outward profession of Islām and devoted himself to the care of the tomb of Ḥusayn at Karbala.* He was a native of Salamīyah, a city in Syria, and claimed to be a descendant of the family of 'Alī. Most of the Alides deny his pretensions, and God is all-knowing. Ibn Mālīk pronounces him to have been a Jew.

A certain man, who belonged to Karbala, entered into terms of friendship with Maymūn. He was known by the name of Maṣṣūr son of (Ḥusayn son of ?) Zādān son of Ḥaushab son of al-Faraj son of al-Mubārak, a descendant of 'Aḳīl son of Abu Ṭālib. His grandfather Zādān was a Dodekite Shī'ah, and one of the chief men of Kūfah, and he appointed his sons to dwell at the tomb of Ḥusayn. When Maymūn came, he attached himself to Maṣṣūr, [and perceiving] his eminent qualities and his fitness to command, he sought his friendship and his society. Maymūn was a man possessed of remarkable ability, which he employed for the furtherance of his objects. He was learned in the science of the stars, and it became known unto him that Manṣūr was destined to rule, and that he was to be one of the propagators of his son's claims. When Ibn Faḍl came and attached himself to him, Maymūn perceived that what he sought was found, Ibn Faḍl being a native of Yaman, well acquainted with the country and with its people.

Maymūn, speaking to Manṣūr said unto him :
“ O Abu 'l-Ḳāsim, verily submission to the law of God belongeth to Yaman, wisdom belongeth to Yaman, the foundation of all things is there, all great events have their beginning in Yaman and the issue endureth whilst its star endureth.¹³⁴ I am of opinion that thou and our friend 'Aly ibn Faḍl proceed to Yaman. Ye shall call upon its people to recognize the authority of my son, and ye shall attain in that country power and dominion.” Manṣūr had learned much from Maymūn of the means whereby their ends could be gained. He agreed to what was proposed. Maymūn brought him and Ibn Faḍl into one another's presence, he made them enter into a mutual compact, and solemnly charged each one to deal justly by his companion. Manṣūr's relation is as follows :—

“ When Maymūn decided upon sending us to Yaman he exhorted and instructed us. He desired me, on my arrival, to conceal my objects, so that they might be more surely attained. Twice repeating the name of God, he charged me with the care of my companion, to protect him, to act justly towards him, and to enjoin upon him the practice of righteousness. ‘ He is one,’ he added, ‘ unto whom a high destiny is reserved, and yet I cannot withal be free of uneasiness respecting him.' Then turning to Ibn Faḍl, he said unto him: 'In the name of 141 God! In the name of God! I charge thee to deal righteously with thy companion. Respect him, recognize what is due to him and obey him. His knowledge is greater than thine, and it is greater than mine. If thou disregard his authority, thou shalt be deprived of safe guidance.'

"He bade us farewell, and we travelled with the pilgrims until we reached Mecca. We performed the rites of pilgrimage and then proceeded with the pilgrims of Yaman and reached Ghulāfiḳah.¹³⁵ We parted after mutual promises not to forget one another, and pledges that each should keep his companion informed of his proceedings. I went forth and arrived at al-Janād, then in the possession of al-Ja'fari, who had conquered it and wrested it from the hands of Ibn Ya'fur.

"The Shaykh Maymūn had solemnly enjoined me to commence the accomplishment of my mission at no other place but at one named 'Aden-Lā'ah, 'for,' he said, 'it is the town in which thy talents will find their field and in which thou shalt accomplish thine objects.' I was unacquainted with the place, and I reached 'Aden-Abyan. I sought information respecting 'Aden-Lā'ah and was informed that it was in the neighbourhood of Ḥajjah. I next inquired after any natives of the place who might have come to 'Aden-Abyan, and was directed to certain persons who had come for purposes of trade. I made their acquaintance and frequented their society and contrived to win their friendship. I told them that I was a man devoted to study, that I had heard they were natives of a mountainous country, and that I desired to visit it in their company. They bade me welcome, and when they departed I accompanied them. On the road I entertained them with the recital of traditions. I urged upon them the observance of the duty of prayer, and they followed the examples I set them. On arrival at Lā'ah, I inquired for its principal city, and was directed to it. I proceeded thither and I became an assiduous frequenter of certain of its mosques. I devoted myself to the worship of God, and a large number of persons attached themselves to me. When I perceived that affection for me had taken possession of their hearts, I informed them that I had come to their country for no other purpose but to call upon them to recognize the Mahdy announced by the Prophet, whom God bless and hail with salutations of peace. I made a large number swear to be faithful, and they commenced paying me the legal alms. When a considerable sum had accumulated in my hands, I told them it was necessary I should possess a place of defence, where the alms could be preserved in safety and which should be a treasure-house unto the Muslims. 'Ayn Muḥarram was accordingly built for the purpose. The fortress belonged to a people known by the name of Banu 'l-'Ad'ā, and thither I removed the corn and money that had accrued to me.* When I proceeded to the fortress, carrying with me my possessions, five hundred men, who had sworn to be faithful, accompanied me, bringing with them their property and their families. I now openly exhorted unto submission to 'Obayd Allāh the Mahdy, son of the Shaykh Maymūn, and the people, without exception, showed themselves disposed to conform."

On gaining possession of the mountain of Maswar, al-Manṣūr adopted the use of drums and of standards. He was attended by thirty drummers, and whatever place he came to, the sound could be heard from a great distance. Al-Ḥawwāli (Ibn Ya'fur) possessed a fortress on the mountain of Maswar, under the charge of a governor, from whose hands the place was wrested by al-Manṣūr. The latter, seeing that his authority was securely established, now wrote to Maymūn informing him thereof, and of his having overcome all opposition. He sent him splendid presents and articles of value. This was in the year 290. Maymūn, on the news reaching him, and on receiving the presents, said to his son 'Obayd (Allah): "Behold thy supremacy is now established, but my desire is that it shall be publicly proclaimed only from North Africa."¹³⁶ He then sent Abu 'Abd Allah al-Ḥusayn son of Aḥmad son of Muḥammad son of Zakarīyā, known under the name of ash-Shīya'ī (the Shī'ite) and a native of Ṣan'ā, to North Africa, and ordered him to organize its people and to subject them to his son 'Obayd (Allah). Abu 'Abd Allah accordingly went forth as he was commanded. He was a man of remarkable ability, one of those whose names, on account of their talents in the science of government, become proverbial. His task was not completed until the year 296, when he wrote to the Mahdy informing him that the people recognized his authority, and he bade him come. 'Obayd (Allah), surnamed the Mahdy, hastened to comply, and arrived in the province of Africa. Abu 'Abd Allah had become possessed of supreme authority, and on arrival of the Mahdy, he delivered it into his hands. His brother reproached him saying: "An evil thing is this that thou hast done! Supreme power was in thine hands, and thou givest it unto another!" He continued to repeat these words until they impressed themselves upon his brother's mind. Abu 'Abd Allah resolved to betray the Mahdy, but the latter received information of what was occurring. He was filled with alarm, and instigated against his rival a person, by whom Abu 'Abd Allah and his brother were slain on the same day, the fifteenth of Jamād al-Ākhir of the year 298.

This man, 'Abd Allah ('Obayd Allah) surnamed the Mahdy,* was ancestor of the sovereigns of North Africa who afterwards held Egypt. Ibn Khallikān says, touching the 'Obaydites' pedigree, that they were descendants of 'Obayd Allah, and that some persons term them Alides, thereby acknowledging their pretensions. And God is all-knowing.†

In the foregoing abstract, I have set forth the rise of the Karmathian power in Yaman, the events in which Mansūr, a man of singularly sound judgment, was concerned, and his objects. The history of Ibn Faḍl will now be entered into at such length as to make known his achievements and adventures. His pedigree and birth-place have already been mentioned. Those who compiled the history of his life relate that when he parted from Mansūr at Ghulāfiḳah, as hereinbefore stated, he ascended the mountains and proceeded to Janad. Thence he went forth to Abyan, which was at that time in the possession of a man of the tribe of Aṣbaḥ named Muḥammad ibn Abi 'l-'Ula. From Abyan he proceeded to the country of Yāfi'. He found its people to be a medley of the basest of mankind. He withdrew into the valleys, and devoted himself to the worship of God. The people brought him food, of which he ate very sparingly, and only at the hands of those who believed in him. They inhabited the summits of the mountains ‡ and, filled with admiration for him, they requested him to dwell in their midst. For a long time he would not consent, until, when they persisted in their demand, he told them that he was prevented from dwelling among them by their disobedience to the commands they had received enjoining the practice of righteousness, and by their neglect of the prohibitions to do evil and to indulge in intoxicating drinks and in wickedness. They swore to be faithful unto him, and to obey his commands, whereupon he promised that they should be rewarded. They now began to collect and to pay him the legal alms and tithes, and large sums accumulated in his hands. He attacked Abyan, slew the ruler of the province, declared the country and all it contained to be lawful booty unto his followers, and possessed himself of a large amount of wealth. He then marched upon Mudhaykhirah,* a large city on Mount Raymah, which was under the rule of the Ja'farite.† He attacked him repeatedly, his efforts were crowned with success, and the Prince was slain.‡ His country was declared to be lawful booty, and the women were reduced to captivity. Ibn Malik has entered, in his treatise, into full particulars of these events, but they are not necessary for the purposes of this book and may be deferred to another occasion. Ibn Faḍl having reached al-Mudhaykhirah was pleased with it. He there openly avowed his doctrines and made the city the seat of his government. Soon after he declared himself a prophet, and as such he proclaimed to his followers 144 the lawfulness of wine, and of intercourse with their daughters and sisters. He proceeded to Janad at the season of the festival, the first Thursday of Rajab.* He mounted the pulpit and recited the well-known verses of which the following is a copy :—

Seize the tabour, O maiden, disport thyself, sing thy merriest songs and rejoice.

The prophet of the line of Hāshim hath passed away. But another hath arisen, and he of the stem of Ya'rub.

Every prophet hath his law. Hearken now unto the law of this other prophet.

He hath released us from subjection to prayer and to fasts. No longer shalt thou suffer under their burden.

When others pray thou needest not rise ; when they fast, eat thou and drink.

Seek not the course between Şafa and Marwah,† nor to visit the tomb at Yathrib.‡

Deny not thyself the marriage-bed of thy nearest, whilst consenting to that of the stranger.

How canst thou be lawful unto the stranger, and forbidden unto thy father ?

Doth the plant not belong unto him that tended it and watered it in the days when it was yet unproductive ?

Wine is lawful as the waters of heaven, and its use is now hallowed by the law.¹³⁷

Ibn Fadl's authority acquired increasing strength and stability. He conquered Mikhlāf Ja'far and Janad, and then determined upon attacking Şan'ā, at that time under the rule of As'ad ibn Ibrahīm ibn Ya'fur. He marched by way of Dhamār and captured the fortress of Hirrān. Its governor and most of the people accepted the doctrines of the new sect. The remainder took refuge with As'ad ibn Ya'fur. The latter on learning the strength of his enemy's forces fled, and Ibn Fadl entered Şan'ā on Thursday, third of Ramaḍān of the year 299.¹³⁸

At the time of his arrival exceedingly heavy rains occurred. Ibn Faḍl alighted at the mosque and caused the channels, provided for carrying away the water, to be closed. He ordered the women, captured at Ṣan'ā and elsewhere, to be brought to him, and he ascended the minaret. The women were cast into the water with uncovered faces and 145 naked, and those that found favour in his eyes he took into the minaret and dishonoured. It is said that many virgins underwent that fate.

The water was retained in the mosque. It filled the building up to the ceiling, and the traces thereof may be perceived to this day. The fact is mentioned by the Kādi Surayy (ibn Ibrāhīm), whose life will be related hereafter (among other biographies of Jurists).

Ibn Faḍl now shaved the hair of his head, and one hundred thousand persons followed his example. He ordered the house of Ibn 'Anbasah to be destroyed, expecting to find a large sum in gold, but only ten thousand dinārs were found, although Ibn 'Anbasah was one of the leading men of Ṣan'ā, who fled from the city along with As'ad. On hearing of the destruction of his house, he sickened and died.

When Maṣṣūr heard of Ibn Faḍl's capture of Ṣan'ā he was filled with gladness. He came unto him and they met and rejoiced with one another. Ibn Faḍl then went forth unto Ḥarāz * and besieged al-Mahjam, which he captured. Thence he proceeded to al-Kadrā and took it likewise. He then reached Zabīd, at that period under the rule of Abu 'l-Jaysh Iṣḥāq son of Ibrāhīm, son of Muḥammad who came to Ḥaman from Baghdad. It is said that Abu 'l-Jaysh fled from Zabīd, and according to other accounts, that he fought and that he was slain by Ibn Faḍl.* Zabīd was declared lawful spoil. The women were reduced to captivity, and historians relate that about four thousand virgins were captured, besides mothers of children. Ibn Faḍl then started with his army for al-Mudhaykhirah, by way of al-Mīrād (?), a mountain east of Zabīd. On reaching a place named al-Madāhīṣ, or al-Mashākhīṣ,¹³⁹ he ordered his criers to proclaim a halt. The troops accordingly halted and were summoned to assemble. They obeyed and gathered around him, whereupon Ibn Faḍl spoke unto them, saying: "Ye know that ye have come forth for no other purpose but that of striving for the advancement of the cause of God. Ye have captured a large number of the women of al-Ḥuṣayb, but I cannot trust them with you, lest they fascinate you by their allurements and divert you from the holy war.¹⁴⁰ Let every man, therefore, slay the women that have accompanied him." They obeyed. The traces of their victims' blood continued visible for many years, and for that reason the place was named al-Madāhīṣ or al-Mashākhīṣ. On reaching al-Mudhaykhirah, Ibn Faḍl ordered the roads to be closed to traffic, especially the pilgrim roads. "Perform the pilgrimage," he said, "to al-Ḥarf, a place near al-Mudhaykhirah, and perform the minor ceremonies at ath-Thālathi (?)." The latter is a valley in the vicinity of al-Ḥarf.†

whose cause he had hitherto professed to labour. He wrote informing his colleague Manṣūr. The latter answered, reproaching him and saying: "How canst thou renounce the authority of him through whom alone thou hast acquired all that is good, and how canst thou discontinue the propagation of his supremacy? Rememberest thou not the pledges entered into between him and thee, and hast thou forgotten the identical injunctions he placed upon us to act together in harmony?" Ibn Faḍl heeded him not, but again wrote, saying: "My case is that of Abu Sa'īd al-Jannābi!"¹⁴ Is it an evil thing in him that he hath proclaimed himself paramount? If thou dost not come hither and submit thyself unto me, I will make open war upon thee." When Manṣūr read these words the conviction of Ibn Faḍl's treason was forced upon him. He ascended Mount Maswar and occupied himself in strengthening its works. "I have fortified this mountain," he said, "solely against that insolent rebel and against his like, for I perceived in his face the evil that was in him, when we met at Ṣan'ā." Soon after sending his letter, Ibn Faḍl prepared to attack Manṣūr. He collected for the purpose ten thousand men, the choice of his army. He marched from Mudhaykhirah and reached Shibām.^{*} Repeated battles were fought between his troops and those of Manṣūr. He then entered the district of Lā'ah and he ascended Mount Jamīmah, a word of which the first letter is moved by the vowel a. It is the same as Mount Fā'ish, near Maswar, and belonged to a tribe known by the name of Banu Muntāb.[†]

* The place here referred to, I presume to be Shibām-Akyān. See Note 11.

† I do not find the name Jamīmah in Hamdāni's Geography. For Jabal Fā'ish, see Note 11. Dr. Glaser has Dj. Djemime in lat. about 16° 6', but that can hardly be the same.

For eight months he besieged Manṣūr without success. His long detention became grievous unto him, and Manṣūr received information thereof. He sent proposals of peace, but Ibn Faḍl replied that he would not agree thereto, unless Manṣūr sent him his son to remain with him, subject to his authority. It should not, he said, be reported of him that he had departed without gaining his ends, but it should be known and spread among the people, that he had left Manṣūr of his good grace and not for lack of power. Manṣūr complied with his demands. He came, accompanied by one of his sons, unto 147 Ibn Faḍl, who placed upon his neck a golden collar.*

On his return to al-Mudhaykhirah, Ibn Faḍl directed his efforts to the task of legalizing things prohibited by the law and of inculcating liberty to do that which is forbidden. He erected a large building, in which he was in the habit of collecting most of his sectaries, men and women, decked with ornaments and perfumed. The place was lighted with candles and the guests entertained one another with conversation of the most attractive and alluring character. Then the lights were extinguished and each man laid his hands upon a woman, whom having seized he did not abandon, even though she were unto him within the forbidden degrees. Sometimes it happened that what fell to a man's lot did not please him, either on account of his partner's years, or for some similar reason. He might endeavour to escape from her, but she would allow him no excuse. Ibn Mālik relates that a very aged woman once fell to the lot of a certain man. On discovering the fact he desired to slip away from her, whereupon she said to him : “ Du budda min dhi hukmu 'l-Amīr.” Du is the negative in certain dialects of Yaman, and dhi is used for the relative pronoun illadhi. The sentence therefore signifies : There is no escape from that which is an ordinance of the Amīr, that is to say, of Ibn Faḍl.

Such practices are most shameful and pernicious, and they are repudiated by all who follow the doctrines of Ismāilism. They are things that cannot be proved against anyone but Ibn Faḍl. I have inquired of many persons, from whom correct information can be obtained respecting the doctrines of the sect. They condemned these misdeeds, and I found all agreed in regarding ‘Aly ibn Faḍl as an atheist, whilst upholding Maṣṣūr al-Yaman as one of the most distinguished and most worthy men of their sect. These opinions are in conformity with the conclusions I have myself arrived at, and they are firmly established in my mind.

When Ibn Faḍl in consequence of his partiality for al-Mudhaykhirah made it his place of residence, he appointed As‘ad ibn Ya‘fur, of whom mention has been made, to be his deputy over Ṣan‘ā. He was not convinced that As‘ad had really allied himself with him, and he was, on the contrary, apprehensive of treachery. He therefore made him his deputy at Ṣan‘ā. As‘ad was, indeed, keenly desirous to avenge the Muslims, and he was also filled with mistrust and with resentment against Ibn Faḍl. He rarely abode at Ṣan‘ā, through fear of a sudden 148 attack. Ibn Jarīr says that the heading of Ibn Faḍl’s letters to As‘ad was as follows : “ From him who hath spread out the plains of the earth and extended them as a carpet, who maketh the mountains to shake and who hath firmly rooted them, ‘Aly ibn Faḍl, unto his slave As‘ad.” Naught besides these words is required to convict him of atheism, from which God grant us to be preserved.

Whilst As'ad was acting as deputy for Ibn Faḍl, there came unto him a stranger, said to be a Sharīf and native of Baghdād. He became an associate and companion to As'ad. It is said that he was sent by the Sovereign of Baghdād for the purpose of contriving the death of Ibn Faḍl, and he abode with As'ad for a time. This man, who was a surgeon, had a perfect knowledge of therapeutics, he was highly skilled in venesection, in the cure of wounds and in the administration of beneficial remedies. Perceiving the intensity of As'ad's fear of Ibn Faḍl, he said to the Prince: "I have resolved upon making my life an offering unto God, and an alms unto the Muslims, that I may relieve them of this tyrant. Give me now thy promise, that if I return unto thee, thou wilt share with me the sovereignty thou shalt acquire." As'ad gave his consent, and the stranger equipped himself for his undertaking and left the Prince, who was then dwelling in al-Jauf, in the country of Hamdān, in perpetual fear of Ibn Faḍl.* The stranger travelled until he reached al-Mudhaykhirah. There he sought the society of the foremost and greatest officials of the State. He attended upon them, bled them, and administered healing draughts and boluses. They mentioned him to Ibn Faḍl, praised him and described the skill he displayed, which, it was said, was such that its possessor's services were meet for none but for such as Ibn Faḍl or his equals in rank.

On a certain day Ibn Faḍl desired to be bled. He inquired for the stranger, who was brought to him. The physician, on being summoned, applied poison to his own hair on the front of his head, and his hair was very thick. On entering into the presence of Ibn Faḍl, he was ordered to divest himself of his raiment and to put on other garments provided for the purpose. Ibn Faḍl then commanded him to draw near for the purpose of performing the operation. He obeyed, and seated himself in front of him. He then produced the lancet and, placing it between his lips, he sucked it, to show that it was free from poison. Then he wiped it upon his hair at the spot where he had placed the poison, some of which adhered to the lancet. He now bled his patient from one of the veins of his hand, and having bound up the wound, he hastily departed. Resting 149 his fears upon the praise he rendered unto God, he travelled forth from al-Mudhaykhirah, hastening to rejoin As'ad ibn Ya'fur.

* Al-Jauf is the name given to a large district in the country of Hamdān, watered by four rivers, of which the most important is the Khārid (Hamdāni, p. 81).

When Ibn Faḍl had rested for a while, he began to feel the effects of the poison. He became aware that he had been deceived by the phlebotomist and commanded him to be sent for, but the man could not be found. Ibn Faḍl's desire for his capture increased, and he ordered him to be pursued whithersoever he might have gone, and to be brought back. Soldiers went forth seeking him in various directions, until one of them overtook the physician in Wādi Saḥūl, close to the mosque known by the name of Ḳaynān.* He would not surrender, but defended himself and was killed. His tomb is on that spot. It is a mosque for congregational prayer, supplied with a minaret. It is much visited, and blessings attend those who resort to it. I visited it in the year 696.

* Al-Hamdāni mentions Ḳaynān as situated in the province of Saḥūl and in the northern portion of the country of Dhu 'l-Kalā', pp. 68, 6, and 100, 15.

The death of the physician was soon followed by that of Ibn Faḍl, on the night of Thursday the fifteenth of Rabī'u 'l-Ākhir of the year 303. The Muslims suffered under the trials of his usurpation, for a period of seventeen years. When As'ad heard of his death he rejoiced, and so did all the people of Yaman, with exceeding joy. They wrote to As'ad requesting him to attack Mudhaykhirah, and to destroy the dominion of the Karmathians. He consented and collected a strong force from San'ā and its neighbourhood. On his arrival in Mikhlāf Ja'far, he was joined by its inhabitants, as also by the people of Janad and of al-Ma'āfir, and the army marched upon al-Mudhaykhirah.

Ibn Faḍl had left a son who was known by the name of al-Ghāfā'i, by reason of a whiteness on the iris of his eyes. As'ad besieged al-Mudhaykhirah with his troops. He encamped upon Mount Thaumān, which I have hereinbefore mentioned, when speaking of al-Ja'fari. It is now known by the name of Mountain of Khaulān, because it is inhabited by Arabs of that tribe, known under the name of Banu 'l-Bi'm (?). The army remained at this place, and whenever troops issued forth from the city, the Muslims defeated them. This occurred time after time, until the enemy was utterly disheartened and humbled. As'ad then erected mangonels, by means of which most of the houses in the city were destroyed, and he finally captured the place by force of arms. The son of 'Aly ibn Faḍl and as many of his followers, members of his family and persons who had embraced his sect, as As'ad could lay his hands upon, were put to death. His daughters, three in number, were captured. As'ad selected one, named Mu'ādhah, and gave her to his nephew Kaḥṭān, unto whom she bore 'Abd Allah, of whom mention will be made hereafter.* Her two sisters fell to the lot of two chiefs. The siege of al-Mudhaykhirah by the Muslims endured for a whole year, and it is said that during all that time As'ad never put off his armour or divested himself of his sword. The rule of the Karmathians was extirpated from Mikhlāf Ja'far, and al-Mudhaykhirah has continued in ruins from that period unto the present.

As for Manṣūr, he continued in the condition above described, but (in contrast with Ibn Faḍl) he was an able ruler who took pleasure in the performance of good works, the record whereof endureth. He did not leave the district of Lā'ah, and he died before Ibn Faḍl, in the year 302, after bequeathing his authority to a son of the name of Hasan and to one of his followers, named 'Abd Allah ibn al-'Abbās ash-Shāwiry. Manṣūr placed special confidence in this man, and had sent him on a mission with letters and presents to the Mahdy ('Obayd Allah), to whom ash-Shāwiry became personally known, and whose esteem he also won. Manṣūr, on becoming sensible of his approaching death, sent for these two persons and said unto them : " I charge you both with the care of our dominion. Be careful to preserve it, and cease not to propagate the authority of 'Obayd (Allah) ibn Maymūn. We are one of the trees his family hath planted, and but for our appeals to their rights and authority, our ends could not have been gained. It will be your duty to communicate, by means of letters, with our Imām the Mahdy, and upon naught shall ye decide without consulting him. I have not gained the dominion we possess by means of great riches nor with the help of multitudes of men. I came to this country unwillingly, and I have attained the results that are known unto you, under the good auspices of the Mahdy, of whose coming the glad tidings were given by the Prophet, whom God bless and hail with salutations of peace." These words he often repeated before multitudes of people.

Upon the death of Manṣūr, ash-Shāwiry, the executor of his will, wrote to the Mahdy, then residing at Mahdīyah, informing him of the event and stating that the office of Dā'y remained in suspense, awaiting the Mahdy's commands. But he sent also assurances that he was prepared to exercise the office of Dā'y with loyalty and fidelity, apart from the sons of Manṣūr. One of the latter was entrusted with the letter. He set forth upon his journey, and on arriving at al-Mahdīyah he delivered the letter, with the contents of which he was unacquainted. The Mahdy knew ash-Shāwiry, who had aforesometimes come unto him with missives from Manṣūr. He knew him to be well qualified to fulfil the office of Dā'y, and he feared lest the sons of Manṣūr should prove unequal to the task. The Mahdy replied consenting to the appointment of ash-Shāwiry alone, and the son of Manṣūr returned to Yaman deceived in his expectations. But he concealed his disappointment and delivered the Mahdy's letter. He and his brethren continued on terms of friendly intercourse with ash-Shāwiry, who on his side showed them honour and respect. He did not preclude them from free access unto him. They entered his presence whensoever they pleased, without the interference of a chamberlain. At length, he who had been sent to the Mahdy came unto him, and seizing an opportunity when ash-Shāwiry was off his guard, he slew him. He made himself master of the country, and collecting the people from every district, he took them to witness that he abjured his father's sect, and that he joined that of the Sunnis. The people listened with approval, they rewarded him with their love and they submitted to his authority. One of his brethren, named Ja'far, came unto him. Ja'far condemned his brother's conduct and upbraided him, but his brother would not listen. Ja'far left him in anger and went unto the Mahdy at Kayrawān. He found that 'Obayd Allah was dead and that he had been succeeded by his son al-Kā'im (bi amr Illah). These events had occurred in the year 322. The son of Maṣṣūr remained with the new Khalīfah.

Meanwhile his brother massacred the members of his father's sect, and drove them forth, until none remained around him but such whose religious tenets were held in secret. Only a small number continued to dwell in the country and they corresponded with the family of 'Obayd (Allah) son of Maymūn at Kayrawān. The son of Maṣṣūr then went forth from Maswar unto 'Ayn Muḥarram, which has been previously mentioned, and where there was a man of the family of al-'Arjā, sultāns of that country. The son of Maṣṣūr (before starting) appointed a deputy over Maswar, a man named Ibrahīm ibn 'Abd al-Majīd (al-Ḥamīd?) ash-Shīya'y. He was ancestor of the Banu 'l-Muntāb, after whom Maswar has been named and is called al-Muntāb. When the son of Maṣṣūr reached 'Ayn Muḥarram, Ibn al-'Arjā suddenly attacked him and killed him. Ibn 'Abd al-Ḥamīd, on hearing thereof [tarried at Maswar and proclaimed himself sovereign of the district]. The members and women of the family of Maṣṣūr who were with him, fled to Mount al-Ḥashab (Bani A'shab),* but they were attacked

* The tribe of A'shab son of Kudam dwelt, according to Hamdāni, in the mountains between the rivers Lā'ah and Surdud (p. 112, l. 19 sqq.).

Ibn al-‘Arjā and Ibn ‘Abd al-Ḥamīd arrived at an agreement, in accordance with which the country was divided between them. Ibn ‘Abd al-Ḥamīd abjured the doctrines of Manṣūr. He built a mosque, in which he placed a pulpit, and the Khuṭbah was recited therein in the names of the ‘Abbasside Khalīfahs. He sought out the Karmathians wherever he could hear of them, until they were almost exterminated, and only a small remnant continued to subsist in the neighbourhood of Maswar, who held the doctrines of their sect in secret and who recognized as their chief a man known by the name of [Ibn at-Ṭufayl. He was slain by Ibrahīm. But after the latter’s death and during the reign of al-Muntāb son of Ibrahīm, at-Ṭufayl was succeeded in the office of Dā’y by a person named] Ibn Raḥīm (Ibn Juftam ?), a man of resolute character. His dwelling-place was kept secret lest al-Muntāb or other Sunnites should lay hands upon him, but he was in correspondence with the family of the Mahdy whilst they were at Kayrawān and afterwards in Egypt. It was in his days that al-Mu‘izz son of (al-Manṣūr billah son of) al-Kā’im son of the Mahdy (‘Obayd Allah) came to Egypt and built Cairo, which became his place of residence.¹⁴² When Ibn Juftam felt the approach of death, he appointed over his sectaries a man named Yūsuf ibn al-Asad (?). Ibn Juftam died when al-Ḥākim (grandson of al-Mu‘izz) was on the throne at Cairo (A.H. 386—411).¹⁴³ Ibn al-Asad secretly laboured to spread al-Ḥākim’s supremacy, and recognized it himself until he knew that his end was nigh, when he appointed as his successor a man named Suleymān (read ‘Āmir) ibn ‘Abd Allah ar-Rawāhy, a native of the district of Shibām. He was a man of great wealth, of which he made use in beguiling the people and in protecting his own followers from persecution. If any person meditated putting him to death, he would say: "I am a Muslim and I bear testimony that there is no God but God. How then can the spilling of my blood or the seizure of my property be lawful unto you?" Thereupon he would be left to go his way. On the approach of death, he appointed as his successor 'Alī son of Muḥammad the Sulayhite. The latter's family was originally from al-Aḥrāj (al-Akhrūj),¹⁴⁴ and he was a member of the community of Shī'ahs of Ḥarāz.

NOTES.

NOTE 1 to p. 1.—The Dā'īs, a word derived from a verb signifying to invite or summon, were missionaries employed by the Ismailites, to teach and propagate the doctrines of their sect. Their Chief, whose residence, under the Fatimite (or Ismailite) Khalifahs, was at Cairo, was styled the Dā'ī of Dā'īs. The title was hardly inferior to that of Kādī of Kādīs, and both offices were frequently held by the same person. It has been suggested that the word is the origin of the designation Dey, applied by Europeans to the Viceroy of Algiers.

NOTE 2 to p. 3.—These words occur in five separate passages of the Qur'ān. That in Ch. xxxv. v. 19 is as follows:—

No burdened soul shall (on the day of resurrection) bear the load that belongeth unto another. And though one call upon another to assume its burden, that other shall not be laden therewith, even though the appeal proceed from its nearest kindred.

NOTE 3 to p. 3.—The Ash'arites were Qaḥṭānites, descendants of 'Arīb. A noteworthy member of the tribe was Abu 'l-Ḥasan 'Alī al-Ash'arī, originator of the religious sect known as the Ash'arites. The 'Akkites are likewise often described as Qaḥṭānites, descendants of Mālik and Qaḥṭān and of 'Udthān. But it is said that the last-mentioned name must be read 'Adnān, and that the 'Akkites are to be reckoned as an Ishmaelite tribe. They removed at an early date to the Tihāmah of Yaman, where they entered into close alliance with the Ash'arites. The two tribes are stated to have been the first to apostatize in Yaman upon the death of the Prophet.

In all works on Arab history and on the geography of Arabia, continual reference is made to seemingly endless numbers of tribes, and more especially is this so when the Yamanite provinces are in question. Readers unfamiliar with the subject, may find it useful to be supplied with its general outlines, and I accordingly add to this note an enumeration of the principal tribes of Yaman. Carefully prepared tables have been constructed by F. Wüstenfeld, and they will be found of great service to anyone desirous of studying the Arab tribal system. For the following slight sketch, not having Wüstenfeld's book within easy reach, I have contented myself with following Ibn Khaldūn's chapters on the descent of the tribes, making, however, certain corrections and additions, chiefly derived from Hamdāni's Description of Arabia, from Yāḳūt's Geographical Dictionary, and, in a small number of instances, from one or two other works.

The subject, it must be remarked is beset with so many discrepancies and with such frequent disagreements, that it would be impossible to supply, within a moderate compass, anything approaching to an exhaustive account of the tribes and of their genealogies, as taught by the native traditionists. Many tribes, moreover, some of common, others of entirely distinct lineage, bear the same name, and their origin is not unfrequently matter of dispute. Al-Hamdāni, speaking of certain Arabs bearing the name of Ja'dah (p. 89-90), who, he says, claimed to be descendants of the Ishmaelite tribe of Ja'dah derived from Ḳays 'Aylān, makes the remark that it was a common practice for a tribe of desert Arabs to avail itself of such similarity of name, and to assert a claim to identity of lineage with that of a greater and more illustrious namesake. The thing, he continues, was of frequent occurrence and had often come under his personal observation.

The inhabitants of the Arabian Peninsula are by common consent divided into two great Septs or Nations, one of which, the more ancient of the two, is generally known under the designation of the Yamanite tribes, because for the most part they inhabited, and still inhabit, the southern provinces of Arabia. They claim to be the direct descendants of Ḳahtān, whom the Arabs identify with Joktan of the Jewish Scripture, the ancestor of Hazar-maveth (Ḥadramaut), Uzal, Sheba (Saba) and others. It is admitted that a more ancient tribal race at one time inhabited the Arab Peninsula, but one the greater part of which has long been extinct, whilst of the remainder it is only known that no traces of its posterity can be distinguished. The traditions respecting the aboriginal race, it is further allowed, rest upon no sure authority, with the exception only of the few particulars preserved in the pages of the Kur'ān. It is universally held that these people were, like the Ḳaḥṭānites, descendants of Shem the son of Noah, and it is generally believed that their language was Arabic, a fact positively stated in respect to some of the tribes.

The second great division consists of the race descended from Ishmael son of Abraham. The Ishmaelite Arabs are sometimes termed Nizārites or Ma'addites because they are descended from Nizār son of Ma'add, son of 'Adnān. The precise links in the chain of descent from Ishmael to 'Adnān cannot be authoritatively stated, but the truth of that descent is absolutely unquestioned.

'Adnān is said to have been contemporary with the prophets Jeremiah and Baruch, and with Nebuchadnezzar (Bukht Naṣṣar). The latter, according to Arab tradition, by command of God invaded Northern and Central Arabia, and exterminated all but a small fraction of its inhabitants. Ma'add son of Adnān was at that time in his childhood. He was conveyed, for safety—miraculously, it is said—to the ancient town of Harrān in Mesopotamia. On his return he collected the remnant of his father's people, who had sought refuge with the Yamanites. The Ishmaelite Arabs, according to the commonly received version, are descendants of Ma'add, precisely as the Yamanite Arabs are held to be descendants of Ḳaḥṭān.

The posterity of Ishmael divide themselves into three great stems. That of al-Ya's son of Muḍar son of Nizār, to which belonged, among others, the tribe of Ḳuraysh, whereof the Prophet was a member; that of Ḳays 'Aylān, brother of al-Ya's, and that of Rabī'ah, brother of Muḍar and son of Nizār.

The Yamanite tribes are in like manner divided into three great stems, all descended from Saba or 'Abd ash-Shams (servant of the Sun) son of Yashjub, son of Ya'rub son of Ḳaḥṭān.

There are in the first place the Himyarites, composed of the descendants of al-'Aranjaj, better known under his surname of Ḥimyar, son of 'Abd ash-Shams. Among the principal Himyarite tribes and those whose names are most frequently met with in the histories of Yamau, were the Banu Shar'ab, the Banu Sha'bān, and numerous tribes descended from Zayd al-Jamhūr, such as the tribes of Dhu Ru'ayn or Yarīm, Yāfī', Wuhāẓah, Dhu 'l-Kalū', Ḥarāz, Maytan, Sahūl, Auzā' and Dhu Aṣḥab. It will be noticed that many places in Yaman were named after the tribes by which they were inhabited.

The other two great Kahtanite stems consist of the descendants of Mālik and of 'Arib, sons of Zayd son of Kahlān son of 'Abd ash-Shams.

Among the tribes of Mālik, the chief place may be assigned to that of Hamdān, descendant of al-Khiyār son of Mālik. The Banu Hamdān branch forth into an almost endless number of subdivisions, all connected together by common descent, and like other Arab sister-tribes, for the most part, though by no means always, in more or less close alliance with one another. Of the Hamdānite sub-tribes, it may be sufficient here to mention the names of Hāshid and Bakīl (seldom dissociated from one another) the Banu Yām, Jusham and Shihāb. Next in importance to the Banu Hamdān may be reckoned the Azdites, a name borne by the most important section of the people who inhabited the country of Saba and its capital Ma'rib, at the time of the rupture of the dyke of 'Arim and of the ruin to which that portion of Yaman was in consequence reduced. All but a small section of the Azdites abandoned the country.* A portion proceeded to 'Omān. The chief body went to the Tihāmah of Yaman, inhabited by the tribes of 'Akk and Ash'ar. Here they settled in the neighbourhood of a Pool named Ghassān, situated between the rivers Zabīd and Rima'. After a lengthened stay, dissensions with the original occupants of the country compelled the Azdites to depart. A portion of the tribe established itself in Najrān, in the neighbourhood of the Madhḥijites who had long occupied and ruled the country. Another section led by Hārithah son of 'Amru, attacked and overcame the Jurhumites at Mecca and became known as the Khuzā'ah, a designation given to them, it is said, because they "separated" themselves from their brethren led by Tha'labah son of 'Amru. The Azdite sub-tribes of Aus and Khazraj, so named after the two grandsons of Tha'labah, possessed themselves of Yathrib (the ancient name of Medinah). Their descendants were the first Arab community to embrace Islām, and their recognition of the Prophet, at a time when his prospects seemed sunk into a depth of utter hopelessness, became the chief means that eventually brought about the triumph of his cause. He accepted the refuge they offered him and he bestowed upon them the title of al-Anṣār, the Defenders, whilst the small party that accompanied him on his flight from Mecca, received the designation al-Muhajirīn, the Emigrants or Refugees. The Ghassanite Azdites gradually travelled northwards and eventually reached Syria, where they founded the kingdom known as that of Ghassān, which endured under Roman supremacy, until the conquest of Syria by the Muslims. Other two tribes of the stem of Mālik are the Banu Khath'am and Banu Bajīlah, descended from al-Ghauth, father of al-Azd. But according to some authorities these two tribes were Ma'addites.

The third great stem of the Kaḥṭānite Arabs consists, as already mentioned, of the descendants of 'Arīb, brother of Mālik. It subdivides itself into four branches, three of which, the Banu Tayy, Banu Madhḥij and Banu Murrah, comprise a large number of sub-tribes. The fourth is the tribe of Ash'ar, the associates of the Banu 'Akk in the Tihāmah of Yaman.

The Banu Tayy abandoned Yaman shortly after the dispersion of the Azdites, and settled for the most part in Northern Arabia, near the mountains of Ajā and Salma, whence they spread into 'Irāḳ and into the Syrian desert. Among the sub-tribes of the Madhḥijites are the Banu Ju'fi, Zubayd, Ḥakam, and Sinḥān, derived from Sa'd al-'Ashīrah son of Madhḥij, also the Banu 'Ans, Banu Murād, Banu Jald, Banu Hurab, Nakha', Munabbih or Janb, and the Banu 'l-Ḥārith ibn Ka'b, who conquered Najrān and dwelt there for many centuries. According to some versions, the Banu Sinḥān and Ḥārith were included in the designation Janb.

From the Banu Murrah were descended the Banu Khaulān, who are described as sons of 'Amru son of Mālik son of al-Ḥārith son of Murrah and their kinsmen the Banu Jurrah sons of Rakla son of 'Amru son of Mālik. Other authorities, however, pronounce the Banu Khaulān to be a sub-tribe of Kuḍā'ah, sons, that is to say, of 'Amru son of al-Ḥāf son of Kuḍā'ah. Al-Hamdāni, if the version given by Yāḳūt (vol. iv. p. 437-38) can be trusted, admits two separate tribes of the same name, one of which he distinguishes under the name of Khaulān al-'Āliyah, and the other as Khaulān-Ḳudā'ah.* The tribes of Hamdān and of Khaulān were by far the largest and most powerful tribes in Yaman.

There were many other subdivisions of the branch of Murrah. Among these may be mentioned the tribe of Ma'āfir (son of Ya'fur—see Hamdāni, p. 67, 25, and Yāqūt iv. 570),† that of Kindah and its sub-tribes Sakūn, Tujīb and Saksak, also the Banu Iakhm, and Banu Judhām.

There remains to be noticed the great Arab stem of Ḳudā'ah, respecting which the generally accepted opinion is that they are descendants of Mālik son of Ḥimyar. Some, however, contend that Ḳudā'ah was son of Ma'add and that his descendants are Ishmaelite Arabs, whilst on the other side it is held that he was only the adopted and step-son of Ma'add. According to another version, the Banu Ḳudā'ah were expelled from Najrān by the Banu 'l-Ḥārith ibn Ka'b the Azdites, and it is said that they went to the Ḥijāz and there became allied with the Ma'addites. The sub-tribes of Ḳudā'ah are very numerous. It may be sufficient to mention here the Banu Kalb, Banu Tanūkh, Banu Jarm, Banu Nahd, Banu 'Udhrah and Banu Fakm. I have already stated that the Banu Khaulān, according to some accounts, were a sub-tribe of Ḳudā'ah.

NOTE 4 to p. 4.—Most of what precedes is reproduced, almost verbatim, by Yāqūt in his article on Zabīd. Ibn Khaldūn, in his account of the descendants of Abu Ṭālib (vol. iv. p. 115), repeats what he tells us in his history of Yaman (supra, p. 141) touching the Khalifah al-Ma'mūn's motives for sending Muḥammad ibn Ziyād to that country. He was sent, he says, on a mission to suppress the rebellion of the Alides, who, under the leadership of Ibrāhīm al-Jazzar (the Butcher), threatened to detach the province from the rest of the Empire. And Ibn Ziyād, he continues, was chosen by al-Ma'mūn on account of the intense hatred he was known to entertain against the family of 'Aly.‡

* In Müller's edition the passage referred to occurs at p. 107. See also pp. 109 and 113. It will be observed that Yāqūt supplies us with a different reading.

‡ Another rebellion is stated to have occurred in Yaman in A.H. 207 (Tabari, iii. p. 1062), led by the Alide 'Abd ar-Raḥmān

Ibn Ziyād's descent seems to be traced through Ziyād's son 'Obayd Allah, the same who took a leading part in the slaughter of the Imām Ḥusayn, grandson of the Prophet, a memorable event which Gibbon has made familiar to English readers. Ziyād himself, the ancestor of the founder of Zabīd, was regarded as son of Abu Sufyān, brother therefore of Mu'āwīyah the first Khalīfah of the Omayyaddynasty. The circumstances of his birth were such, it is true, as to cast grave doubt upon his claims. He was therefore generally known by the surname Ibn Abihi, the son of his father. Mu'āwīyah eventually acknowledged him as his brother, far less, there is reason to suspect, out of conviction, than for the purpose of disarming an ambitious and dangerous subject. Ziyād owed, probably, much of his success and influence to his talent as an orator. It is related of him, that when a young man, barely over twenty years of age, he preached a Khuṭbah at Medinah, the eloquence of which filled his hearers with admiration. "How marvellous a talent hath God granted to that youth!" exclaimed 'Amru ibn al-'Āṣ. "Were his father of the tribe of Kuraysh, it were easy for him to drive the Arab nation before him with a switch!" "By Allah," answered Abu Sufyān, "I know who is his father." 'Aly, who was close at hand, turned round and stopped the discussion of so dangerous a topic: "Silence, Abu Sufyān, for thou well knowest, were 'Omar to hear thy language, its punishment would quickly follow!" Ziyād was born in the first year of the Hijrah and died in A.H. 53.

Suleymān ibn Hishām ibn 'Abd al-Malik, from whom one ibn Aḥmad. It was suppressed, we are told, by Dinār ibn 'Abd Allah, sent for the purpose, at the head of a strong force, by al-Ma'mūn. The insurrection is said to have occurred in the country of the 'Akkites. There is some difficulty in reconciling the story with the statement that the district in question was, at that time, absolutely subject to Ibn Ziyād. But it may well be that the latter's rise in the Tihāmah of Yaman was far less rapid than is represented by 'Omārah. Al-Ḥamdānī, who died in A.H. 334, indeed tells us (p. 103) that, from the time of al-Mu'taṣim (A.H. 218—227) to that of al-Mu'tamid (A.H. 256—279), a certain family of the Banu Shurāḥ (subdivision of the tribe of Dhu Ru'ayn the Himyarites) exercised sovereign rule over the Tihāmah of Yaman. Elsewhere (p. 120, l. 7) he says that the Banu Shurāḥ held paramount sway, at Zabīd, over all the neighbouring Arab tribes. See also p. 119, l. 23.

of the Ziyādite's companions claimed to be descended, was, as is indicated by his name, son of the Omayyad Khalifah Hishām. He was slain in A.H. 132, one of the many victims of the first Abbasside Khalifah 'Abd Allah as-Saffāh, the Blood-spiller. Ibn Ziyād's companion, it will be observed, is also designated the Marwānite, after his ancestor the Khalifah Marwān, father of 'Abd al-Malik.

The Bann Taghlib were a Ma'addite (Ishmaelite) tribe descended from Rabī'ah son of Nizār. The Taghlibite companion of Muḥammad ibn Ziyād bore the same name as Muḥammad (al-Amīn), son and successor of Harūn (ar-Rashīd). Al-Amīn was deposed from the Khalifate in favour of his brother 'Abd Allah al-Ma'mūn, and in A.H. 198 he was captured and slain by Ṭāhir ibn al-Ḥusayn, the general in command of al-Ma'mūn's troops. The new Khalifah, it is said, never ceased secretly to lament the slaughter of his brother. On one occasion, at the sight of Ṭāhir, he burst into tears, and when asked the cause of his grief, he replied that he wept at the remembrance of a thing, the mention of which was dishonour and its suppression mourning. The circumstance was reported to Ṭāhir, who, greatly alarmed, solicited and obtained the government of Khurāsān, where he soon became practically independent, and founded the dynasty known as that of the Ṭāhirites.

NOTE 5 to p. 4.—Al-Khazraji, at this point of his history (p. 78), enters into certain particulars touching the town of Zabīd. The city, he says, is circular in form. It stands half-way between the mountains and the sea, at a distance of about half a days' journey from either. On the south flows the river Zabīd* and on the north the river Rima'. Elsewhere (p. 81), the same writer describes the walls of Zabīd, which he says were originally built by Ḥusayn ibn Salāmah, rebuilt by Mann Allah al-Fātiki, in A.H. 520 and odd years, again by the Banu Mahdy, and again, in A.H. 589, by Sayf al-Islām Tuḡtakīn the Ayyūbite. It has, he says, four gates. One on the east called Bāb ash-Shibārik, leading to Shibārik, a village situated on the river Zabīd, and thence to the fortress of Kawārīr. One on the west, which in his day was called Bāb an-Nakhl, but which at an earlier period bore the name of Bāb Ghulāfiḳah. The road leads to Ghulāfiḳah and to al-Ahwāb. The former, he says, served at one time as the port of Zabīd, but it fell into decay and was superseded by al-Ahwāb, which was in his time known under the name of al-Buḳ'ah. The third gate, on the north, bore the name of Bāb Sahām. It led to Wādi Rima' and Wādi Sahām. The fourth gate, Bāb al-Ḳurtub, on the south, led to Wādi Zabīd and thence to the village of Ḳurtub, situated upon that river.*

Al-Khazraji next enters into lengthy details touching the extent of the walls, in which it is needless to follow him. In describing the city walls and bastions, he quotes the work of Ibn al-Mujāwir, written about A.H. 630, a book freely used by Sprenger, in his valuable work upon Eastern Geography, under the title of Tarikh al-Mustansiry. It may be worth remarking that in the Leiden MS. of al-Khazraji, the word, excepting in one instance, is written al-Mustabsiry.

NOTE 6 to p. 4.—'Omārah's statements touching the foundation of al-Mudhaykhirah and on the derivation of the name Mihlāf Ja'far are mentioned, but absolutely contradicted by al-Janadi. The city of Mudhaykhirah, situated on Mount Thaumān, was built, he says (fol. 182 rev.), by Ja'far ibn Ibrāhīm al-Manākhi. Elsewhere, in his chapter on the Abbasside governors of Yaman, he says (fol. 28 rev.), that the founder of the principality was Ibrāhīm ibn Abi Ja'far al-Manākhi, who conquered Mount Thaumān in the days of al-Ma'mūn. Aḥmad ibn 'Abd al-Ḥamīd, appointed Governor of Yaman in A.H. 213, marched against al-Manākhi in the following year, but was defeated and killed. Janadi specifies the orthography of the name ثومان, but adds that the form of the word is that of the dual of ثوم.

Yākūt gives 'Omārah's description of Mudhaykhirah, as

* Johannsen gives most of these particulars (pp. 120, 253, 261) as they are borrowed from al-Khazraji by Dayba', but having misread انتقل for اسفل, a not inexcusable error in the absence of diacritical points, he has missed the sense of the writer's words regarding the name Buḳ'ah. Khazraji writes : انتقل البندر الى قرية الالهواب و البندر اليوم تسمى البقعة. It will be observed that there is room for doubt whether the name Buḳ'ah is meant to apply to Ghulāfiḳah or to al-Ahwāb.

also the greater part of the passage relating to Ibn Ziyād's freedman Ja'far, as is shown in the notes I have appended to the Arabic text. Yāqūt begins by stating that Mudhaykhirah stood on Mount Šabir, which I need hardly say is an error. (See infra, Note 11.)

Abu Ja'far al-Manākhi was descended, according to Janadi, from Dhu 'l-Muthlah (ذو المله ; but cf. Hamdāni p. 100, l. 25 and 26), the Ḥimyarite, and from Dhu 'l-Manākhi. His posterity continued in existence down to the writer's days, and they were known as Sultāns of Qiyād (? قاض) Bayt 'Izz, Raym (Raymah?) and Karm 'Amim. Ibrahīm Abu Ja'far possessed himself of Mount Raymah as well as of Thaumān, and it acquired the name of Raymat al-Manākhi. He made himself master of the greater part of Mikhlāf Ja'far.

Some further particulars touching the petty dynasty of Manākhi, are supplied in the accounts preserved by al-Janadi and Khazraji, of the circumstances under which the Karmathian or Ismailite doctrines were established in Yaman. Mudhaykhirah, it will be seen, was conquered by Ibn Faḍl. Its ruler at that time, says al-Khazraji (who derives his information from the same source as al-Janadi), was Ja'far ibn Aḥmad (Ibrahīm?) al-Manākhi, after whom Mikhlāf Ja'far is named. Aly ibn Faḍl marched against him in A.H. 291, but was defeated and compelled to fall back upon the country of Yāfi'. Five months later, in A.H. 292, he again attacked the city and he succeeded in gaining possession, first of Mudhaykhirah and next of the fortress of Ta'kar. Ja'far ibn Ibrahīm (sic) fled to Tihāmah and reached al-Ḳurtub in the valley of the river Zabīd. He was assisted with troops by the Prince of Zabīd (Abu 'l-Jaysh Ishāk?). With these he resumed the struggle. A celebrated battle was fought, says Khazraji, in Wādī Nakhlah, in which Ja'far ibn Ibrahīm (sic) and his nephew Abu 'l-Futūh were killed. Ja'far's rule, adds the same writer, endured from A.H. 249 to 292, forty-three years.*

* Hamdāni (p. 75, l. 9) says that "Ja'far ibn Ibrahīm al-Manākhi" was killed at or near the fortress of Khawālah, situated close to one of the sources of the Wādī Nakhlah.

Dr. Glaser visited the town of Menakha near Shibām-Ḥarāz, which I need hardly say is geographically quite distinct from Mikhlāf Ja'far, or the country of al-Manākhi, as it is sometimes called. I find no mention of Manakha in Hamdāni or other

Al-Mudhayklirah, as will be seen, was re-captured from the Ismailites by As'ad ibn Ya'fur, in or shortly after A.H. 303. The city was destroyed, and Janadi adds that it continued in ruins down to his time. It will be noticed that Jabal Thaumān was, in the writer's days, known under the name of Mountain of Khaulān.

NOTE 7 to p. 5.—For Diyār Kindah, Shihr and Mirbāt, see supra, pp. 177, 180 and 182. See also de Goeje's ed. of Ibn Haukal, note to p. 32 (vol. iv. p. 432), whence it appears that a note appended to the Paris text in the sixth century of the Hijrah, describes Mirbāt as a seaport situated at a distance of one and a half days' journey from Zafār, whilst according to Yāqūt the distance is five parasangs. All these places are marked on modern maps.

NOTE 8 to p. 5.—We have seen that Ibn Ziyād was sent to Yaman as Amīr, a word of somewhat doubtful meaning, since it may be taken to signify a Prince, a Governor, or a military Commander. But it is tolerably clear that he was not intended to supersede the Governors of the province of Yaman, whose residence was at Ṣan'ā, and who continued to be appointed by the Khalifah al-Ma'mūn and his successors long after the foundation of the Ziyādite Principality.

The family of the Banu Ya'fur, who eventually established themselves as a virtually independent dynasty at Ṣan'ā, was, according to our text, descended from the native writers I have at my command, and the name in its application to the town in question, is perhaps of more modern date.

Al-Hamdāni mentions another place, Manāḥi, written, according to Müller's edition, with the letter ḥa not kha. He describes it (pp. 82, 12; 110, 6, 8) as situated at the junction of the two main streams of the Wādī Khārid—one of which flows down from Ṣan'ā. The other has its chief sources in the neighbourhood of Shībām-Aqyān and Ḥaḍūr Bani Azd. Its upper course bears, according to Dr. Glaser's map, the name of Wādī Khuzāmīr and, lower down, that of Wādī Shuwābah (cf. Hamdāni, p. 82, l. 6, and p. 110, l. 6). Among its affluents is, as shown by Dr. Glaser, the small stream of Dhī Bīn (or Dhū Bīn), in Balad aṣ-Ṣayad (Hamdāni, p. 82, l. 8, and 111, 25). The town of Dhū Bīn, the burial-place of the Imām Aḥmad ibn Ḥusayn, is frequently mentioned in the histories of the Zaydite Imāms.

Tubbas or ancient Himyarite Kings, and Ibn Khaldūn, in his chapter on the Rassite Sharīfs of Ṣa'dāb, likewise speaks of them as of the posterity of the Tubbas. Elsewhere, when describing the genealogies of the Yamanite princes and tribes (vol. ii. p. 243), he gives us the pedigree of the family of Ya'fur, from which, however, it seems difficult to trace their descent from the Tubbas, excepting inasmuch as they were of the posterity of Zur'ah (Himyar the younger), son of Saba the younger.

Among their ancestors were two who bore the name of Dhu Ḥawwāl,* whence probably the surname the Hawwālites, by which the family is frequently designated. Ya'fur ibn 'Abd ar-Raḥmān, founder of the dynasty, is first heard of, according to Janadi, under the Governorship of Aytākh, who was appointed over Yaman by the Khalifah al-Mu'taṣim, according to aṭ-Ṭabari, in A.H. 225 (vol. iii. p. 1302). Al-Wāthiq (A.H. 227—232), replaced Aytākh by Ja'far ibn Dinār, who had formerly ruled over the country, but had been deposed in favour of Aytākh. The appointment of Ibn Dinār took place in A.H. 231, according to Ibn al-Athīr, and he tells us that the new Governor proceeded to Ṣan'ā accompanied by a force of 4000 horse and 1000 foot soldiers. Janadi says that Ibn Dinār attacked Ya'fur ibn 'Abd ar-Raḥmān, but that peace was eventually concluded between them. Al-Mutawakkil, who succeeded to the Khalifate in A.H. 232, appointed Ḥimyar ibn al-Ḥārith. The new Governor was unable to withstand the attacks of Ya'fur, and was at length compelled to return a fugitive to 'Irāq. Al-Mutawakkil's assassination occurred shortly afterwards (A.H. 247), and Ya'fur made himself master of Ṣan'ā and of Janad, but not of Tihāmah, which since A.H. 204 was in the possession of the Banu Ziyād.

Ya'fur was succeeded by his son Muḥammad ibn Ya'fur. He recognized the supremacy of the Khalifah al-Mu'tamid (A.H. 256—279), who in A.H. 259, formally invested him with the Government of Ṣan'ā. Ḥaḍramaut and Janad were included in the dominions of Muḥammad ibn Ya'fur, but he owned allegiance to the Ziyādites and paid them tribute. He started on the pilgrimage in A.H. 262, after appointing his son Ibrahīm to be his deputy. On his return he built, in 265, the mosque of Şan'ā according to the design which, al-Janadi says, it still retained in his own day. Muḥammad was assassinated by his son Ibrahīm, and the latter, according to al-Janadi quoting Ibn al-Jauzi,* is said to have murdered not only his father, but also his uncle, his cousin and his father's mother.† This occurred, he adds, six months before the death of al-Mu'tamid, in Muḥarram, therefore, of A.H. 279. Ibrahīm continued the alliance with the Ziyādite Princes, but his reign did not long endure, and he was succeeded by his son As'ad, in whose days the Karmathians or Ismailites acquired dominion over the greater part of Yaman. Al-Janadi here proceeds with his account of their conquests and of the subjection of As'ad to 'Aly ibn al-Faḍl, which is included in this volume.

* The name is pointed Ḥiwāl in Müller's edition of Hamdāni (see Note 11). Yāḳūt, s.v. حصيب writes Ḥawwāl.

The statement that Muḥammad ibn Ya'fur was assassinated by his son Ibrahīm is not contained in Khazraji's version of the history of that period (fol. 29). His account, which at this particular point, differs materially from that supplied by al-Janadi, is to the following effect:—

Ibrahīm, he says, continued to administer the affairs of the kingdom after his father's return from Mecca. A rebellion broke out at Şan'ā some time after A.H. 270, and the insurgents offered supreme authority to Ja'far ibn Aḥmad (ibn Ibrahīm?) al-Manākhī. Eventually the entire family of the Banu Ya'fur were driven out of the city, and Muḥammad ibn Ya'fur was shortly afterwards killed at Shibām. He was succeeded, not by Ibrahīm, but by a nephew, 'Abd al-Kādir, son of Aḥmad ibn Ya'fur, a circumstance that may perhaps be accounted for by the charge made against Ibrahīm of being the assassin of his father. 'Abd al-Kādir retained power for only a few days. A governor, 'Aly ibn Ḥusayn Juftam, arrived from Baghdād in Şafar 279, the next month after that in which, according to Janadi, Muḥammad lost his life. Juftam ruled until A.H. 282, when he returned to 'Irāk. Ibrahīm ibn Ya'fur now attained absolute sovereignty, but his reign did not long endure. He died and was succeeded by his son As'ad.

* The writer quoted by Janadi is perhaps the grandson of 'Abd ar-Raḥmān ibn al-Jauzi, namely, Abu 'l-Muẓaffar Yūsuf ibn Kizughli, generally known as Sibṭ ibn al-Jauzi. He was author of a history, Mirāt az-Zamān, which the author of the Kashf az-Zunūn says consisted of forty volumes. A small portion of the work exists in the Library of the British Museum.

In A.H. 288, Ṣan'ā was conquered by the Rassite Imām al-Hādy (see Ṭabari, iii. p. 2204 and Ibn al-Athīr, vii. p. 352). He imprisoned the chief members of the family of Ya'fur, but they were released and escaped to Shibām,* where As'ad's authority over his followers was maintained until he was able to compel the Imām to abandon Ṣan'ā. The city was finally conquered by the Karmathians, in A.H. 299 according to both al-Janādī and al-Khazraji.†

Upon the death of 'Aly ibn al-Faḍl the Karmathian, in A.H. 303, As'ad speedily re-established his authority in Yaman, and it endured until his death in A.H. 332, the year in which al-Mas'ūdī commenced writing his Golden Meadows, in which he describes in glowing terms the wealth and power of the Himyarite Prince.‡

Ibn Khaldūn says (supra, p. 141) that As'ad was succeeded by a brother named Muḥammad, but after As'ad's death, the Banu Ya'fur never again recovered the brilliant position to which he had raised the family. The ensuing twelve years were occupied in the suppression of repeated attempts at rebellion, accompanied by incessant strife between the various members of the family.

In A.H. 345, the Rassite Imām of Ṣa'dah, al-Mukhtār, son of an-Nāṣir Aḥmad son of al-Hādi, acquired possession of Ṣan'ā, but before the end of the year, he was assassinated by a powerful Hamdānite chief, known by the name of Ḍaḥḥāk.§ A freedman of the Banu Ya'fur, 'Aly ibn Wardān, supported by Ḍaḥḥāk, was recognized as Prince of Ṣan'ā. He was barely able to withstand the opposition of the Khaulanites, led by al-Asmar Yūsuf ibn Abi'l-Futūh, * Shibam-Akyan? See Note 11.

† See Note 138. According to the Hadā'ik, al-Hādi acquired possession of Ṣan'ā in 297, and appointed his son over it as Governor. The Imām died, as will be seen (Note 127), in A.H. 298.

The particulars that follow hereabove are for the most part taken from Dayba' (seventh chapter), that is to say therefore, from Khazraji at second hand.

‡ Vol. ii. p. 55, of Barbier de Meynard's printed text and translation.

§ Al-Kāsim, surnamed al-Mukhtār, is mentioned by the Zaydite historians, but they do not reckon him among the Imāms, nor do they say that he was assassinated.

and he died in A.H. 350. He was succeeded by his brother Sapūr, with whom Ḍaḥḥāk continued in alliance. In the following year they made an unsuccessful attack upon the Khaulanites. They were put to flight, and whilst endeavouring to escape to Dhamār, Sapūr was overtaken by al-Asmar and killed.

Ḍaḥḥāk now tendered submission to the Prince of Zabīd, Abu 'l-Ḥasan (Abu 'l-Jaysh?) ibn Ziyād. Al-Asmar the Khaulanite, on the other hand, offered the throne to the Amīr 'Abd Allah ibn Kaḥṭān (grand-nephew of As'ad ibn Ya'fur), by whom the offer was accepted (A.H. 352). He entered Ṣan'ā, whence Ḍaḥḥāk hurriedly fled. Next followed a series of struggles between the contending parties, in which a Rassite Imām, Yūsuf son of Yahya son of an-Nāṣir Aḥmad, took a prominent part, with the result of his being for a time recognized as sovereign Prince of the city and province.* 'Abd Allah succeeded, however, in recovering his authority, and he enjoyed a long but disturbed reign. In A.H. 379 he was able to invade Tihāmah at the head of an army, with which he attacked and utterly defeated "Ibn Ziyād." † Zabīd was taken and sacked, and 'Abd Allah, having abolished the Abbasside Khuṭbah throughout his dominions, proclaimed the supremacy of the Egyptian Fatimites. ‡ He died in A.H. 387 and was succeeded by his son As'ad. But the fortunes of the Banu Ya'fur, as one of the great ruling families of Yaman, were now at an end. The last vestige of their authority in the city of Ṣan'ā disappeared. Their condition became at best that of obscure and petty chiefs, and we are henceforward left in ignorance even of their names. We find mention of them, however, so late as A.H. 679, when we read in Khazraji's 'Ukūd (fol. 115 obv.) as well as in Ibn Ḥātim

* The name of the Imām Yūsuf son of Yahya is mentioned by the Zaydite writers, but I can find no account of his career. The author of the Jawāhir gives him the title of Dā'y, and simply says that he was contemporary with al-Manṣūr al-Ḳāsim. The latter was surnamed al-'Ayāni, after the name of the place in which he proclaimed himself in A.H. 389.

‡ The Fatimite Khalifah al-'Azīz reigned from A.H. 365 to 386. It deserves perhaps to be here borne in mind that 'Abd Allah was, through his mother, grandson of Ibn Faḍl the Karmathian. (Supra, p. 207.)

(fol. 105 obv.), that the Rasūlite Sultān of Yaman regained possession of the fortress of Kaukabān from the Banu Hawwāl.

Ṣan'ā, until its conquest by 'Aly the Sulayhite, became the scene of perpetual strife, not only between the rival tribes of Hamdān and Khaulān, but also between various pretenders to the dignity of Imām. In 389, the Imām al-Manṣūr al-Kāsim son of 'Aly appeared from the country of the Banu Khath'am. With the assistance of the Hamdānites, he drove the Imām Yūsuf son of Yaḥya from Ṣa'dah and placed the city under the command of his son Ja'far. He next reached Raydah,* where he received the submission of Ja'far son of aḍ-Ḍaḥḥāk and of the people of al-Baun. He thence despatched to Ṣan'ā a Zaydite Sharīf, named al-Kāsim ibn Ḥusayn, a descendant of the Imām Zayd son of 'Aly Zayn al-'Abidīn, and the Zaydite sectaries readily submitted to his authority.†

As'ad son of 'Abd Allah the Ya'furite had established his residence at Kaḥlān, and he recognized the supremacy of the Imām al-Kāsim.‡ But ere long the Zaydite Sharīf renounced his allegiance to al-Manṣūr al-Kāsim ibn 'Aly, and declared himself in favour of the authority of the Imām Yūsuf son of Yaḥya. The Imām al-Kāsim died in A.H. 393. Ṣan'ā became the scene of prolonged strife, a prey to contending factions of rival Imāms and Arab families, among which Hamdānites and Khaulānites played a prominent part, but none able to establish a settled or permanent government. In A.H. 401, Ḥusayn son of al-Kāsim declared himself, as has been done by so many pretenders, both before and since his time, to be the Mahdy, whose coming, according to an old tradition, was foretold by the Prophet. He obtained a large following among the Ḥimyarites and Hamdānites, who abandoned the cause of the Zaydite Sharīf. The latter was driven out of Ṣan'ā.

* Raydah was a town of considerable importance, in the district of al-Baun.

† I find no mention elsewhere of this "Zaydite Sharīf."

‡ I have mentioned (supra, p. 171 footnote) that Dr. Glaser has Koḥlān on his map, north-east of Hajjah, probably the old fortress of the Banu Ya'fur. Yāḳūt says that the Yamanites pronounce the name Kuḥlān, but he calls the place a Mikhlaḥ. Hamdāni mentions it as the name of a totally different place, in the neighbourhood, it would appear, of Yarīm or Dhu Ru'ayn. Kuḥlān, according to the Ḳamūs, was the name of an Arab tribe.

He was pursued, overtaken, and killed in A.H. 403. But in the following year, the Mahdy was himself expelled from the city, and lost his life near Dhu Bīn, in the course of an attack by the Hamdānites, from among whom a chief of the family of Dahhāk had been called to the throne by the citizens. The Mahdy had not yet attained the age of thirty years, and long afterwards his adherents, it is said, believed him to be living. In A.H. 413, the Sharif Ja'far, brother of Ḥusayn the Mahdy, arrived from Ṣa'dah on the invitation of the Hamdānites and Ḥimyarites, the former of whom, after the death of Ḥusayn, exercised intermittent authority over Ṣan'ā. In 418, a new and unknown pretender appeared at Ma'rib, who proclaimed himself Imām, under the title of al-Mu'īd li-dīn Allah (He who brings the people back to the religion of God). He succeeded in making himself master of Ṣan'ā,* but was killed in 421, during which and the following year, severe famine prevailed throughout Yaman. In 422 the Imāmate was claimed by Abu Hāshim al-Ḥasan sen of 'Abd ar-Raḥmān, who was accompanied by his son Ḥamzah, from whom the Hamzite Sharifs derive their distinctive appellation.† He possessed himself of Ṣan'ā, from which Ibn Abi Hāshid escaped, whilst Maṣṣūr ibn Abi 'l-Futūḥ tendered his submission. Abu Hāshim's authority endured until A.H. 429, when he was driven forth by the Hamdānites. On their invitation, after an interval of two years, Ja'far son of al-Maṣṣūr al-Kāsim re-established his rule over the city. The next seven years were occupied in conflicts, during the course of which Abu Hāshim, on the invitation of Ibn Abi Hāshid returned and recovered possession of Ṣan'ā for a brief period. Meanwhile a new pretender to the Imāmate, named Abu 'l-Faṭḥ Nāṣir the Daylamite, had appeared. Aided by the Hamdānites, he captured and plundered Ṣa'dah, and next made himself master of Ṣan'ā.‡

* I can find no trace of this personage in the Zaydite historians.

† I do not find the date of Abu Hāshim's death. His son Ḥamzah was killed in A.H. 459 fighting the troops of 'Aly the Sulayhite.

‡ An-Nāṣir Abu 'l-Faṭḥ the Daylamite was a descendant of Zayd son of Ḥasan (see the genealogical table added to Note 107). He arrived in Yaman, from Persia, between A.H. 430 and 440, and is said to have been killed by 'Aly the Sulayhite shortly after 440.

Ja'far son of Maṣṣūr al-Kāsim is likewise stated to have made war upon the troops of aṣ-Ṣulayḥi (see infra, Note 29).

His supremacy was for a time recognized by Ja'far son of the Imām al-Kāsim, and he maintained his authority on a comparatively secure basis, until he was in his turn driven forth from the city by Ja'far and by Ibn Abi Ḥāshid the Khaulānite. Yaḥya ibn Abi Ḥāshid, to whom the writer gives the title of Sulṭān, died at the commencement of A.H. 440. His son was invited by the people to succeed him and received oaths of allegiance from the Hamdānites. Ṣan'ā was conquered (about A.H. 453) by 'Aly the Sulayhite, whose first manifestation in Yaman, adds the writer, dates from the night of Monday, third of the month of Jamādi 'l-Ākhir of the year 439 (429?), the night of the conjunction of the planet Jupiter.

We have seen (supra, p. 41) that when al-Mukarram Aḥmad son of 'Aly transferred the seat of the Sulayhite dominion to Dhu Jiblah in 480, he appointed over Ṣan'ā 'Imrān ibn al-Faḍl the Yāmite. Upon the death, in A.H. 492, of Saba ibn Aḥmad, the city and adjoining country was formed into an independent Principality, under Sulṭān Ḥātim ibn al-Ghashīm, also a member of the tribe of Hamdān (see Note 42). He died in A.H. 502 and was succeeded by his two sons, by 'Abd Allah, who died of poison after a reign of two years, and then by Ma'n ibn Ḥātim, who was deposed in A.H. 510.

Another Hamdānite family reigned until A.H. 533, when Ḥamīd ad-Daulah Ḥātim son of Aḥmad son of 'Imrān son of al-Faḍl—grandson, therefore, of the governor appointed by al-Mukarram the Sulayhite—was invited by the tribe to assume the crown.*

He was attacked in A.H. 545 by the Zaydite Imām al-Mutawakkil Aḥmad son of Sulaymān, against whom, however, he succeeded eventually in defending himself. Ḥātim died in A.H. 556, and was succeeded by his son 'Aly, surnamed al-Waḥīd. 'Aly took the leading part in an alliance, formed in the early part of A.H. 569, against 'Abd an-Naby son of 'Aly ibn Mahdy (see Note 101), and he was the reigning Prince of Ṣan'ā when, six months after his campaign against the Mahdyites, Yaman was invaded and conquered by Turān Shah the Ayyūbite and brother of Saladin.

* It will be seen that, according to the above, Ibn Khaldūn's statement (supra, p. 148), to the effect that 'Imrān ibn al-Faḍl became independent at Ṣan'ā and transmitted the crown to his descendants, is erroneous.

The historian Ibn Ḥātim was a descendant of Ḥamīd ad-Daulah.

Muḥammad son of Aḥmad son of 'Imrān, mentioned at p. 60, must have been brother of Sulṭān Ḥamīd ad-Daulah Ḥātim.

NOTE 9 to p. 6.—Wādi Bayḥān is marked on Walker's map of Arabia, south-west of Ma'rib and north-east of Dhamār, at about the same distance from either.

Nashwān ibn Sa'īd, who according to Ibn Khaldūn (supra, p. 173), was ruler or chief of Bayḥān, wrote the Ḳaṣīdat al-Ḥimyarīyah, published some five and twenty years ago at Vienna, by Baron von Kremer, with a translation into German.

A description of Najrān and Jurash, with a sketch of their early history, are given by Ibn Khaldūn (supra, p. 182).

NOTE 10 to p. 6.—There is evidently an omission here, as I have indicated in the translation.

As to the descriptions of Ṣan'ā, of al-Mudhaykhirah and of Shibām that follow, they are copied almost verbatim from Ibn Ḥauḳal.* The latter borrowed them from al-Iṣṭakhri,† and transferred the passages to his own book, those especially relating to Ṣan'ā and to al-Mudhaykhirah, with such slight alteration, that it is only just possible to pronounce with some degree of certainty, that Ibn Ḥauḳal's Geography was the authority to which 'Omārah had recourse. The statement that Ṣan'ā stands on the equator is made by Ibn Ḥauḳal, but is not to be found in al-Iṣṭakhri. Yākūt quotes the description of Ṣan'ā as given by our author, but the latter's name is printed 'Imrān ibn Abi 'l-Ḥasan instead of 'Omārah.

The statement that follows in our text, to the effect that the mountain of Mudhaykhirah was twenty parasangs or sixty miles in height, appears in both Iṣṭakhri and Ibn Ḥauḳal. I do not know how it can be explained. Even if we read circuit for height, it would be a manifest exaggeration.

NOTE 11 to p. 6.—It must be through a corruption of the text that ‘Omārah is made to speak of Ibn Faḍl as “Sheykh of Lā‘ah,” a designation which could only be properly given to his colleague and eventual rival Ibn Ḥaushab or Maṣūir al-Yaman. I have omitted in my translation, the conjunction that appears in the MS., هذه ولاعة, which reduces somewhat the difficulty of making sense of the passage. It seems to be intended to signify that the town of Aden-Lā‘ah was in the neighbourhood of al-Mudhaykhirah. That this is incorrect is shown with sufficient clearness by ‘Omārah himself, when he tells us that Mudhaykhirah stood in the province of Ja‘far (see Note 6).

Yāqūt has the following passage (vol. iii. p. 622) s.v. ‘Aden : قال عمارة لاعة مدينة في جبل صبر من اعمال صنعاء الى جانبها قرية لاعة proceeding as in our text down to the words العلوية باليمن to which, however, he adds بعد المصريين. Here we have probably the origin of the statement that al-Mudhaykhirah stood on Mount Ṣabir, and indeed other quotations to be found in Yāqūt, as well as the above, lead to the suspicion that his MS. of ‘Omārah was by no means perfect.

Al-Muḥaddasi mentions al-Mudhaykhirah in his enumeration of towns in Yaman (p. 53 and p. 70), along with Janad, Dhamār, Yaḥṣib (or Yaḥḍib), Khaulān, Saḥūl, etc. Hamdāni mentions the place only twice in his Geography, but he tells us (p. 68, l. 3 sqq.) that it was situated in the country of Dhu ‘l-Kalā‘, along with ath-Thujjah (which, it may be inferred (p. 75, l. 23), stood at the foot of Ta‘kar), and together with Ta‘kar itself, Saḥūl, Raymah, etc. At p. 100 (l. 10 sqq.) he tells us that al-Mudhaykhirah, Thaumān (see supra, p. 207), the mountain of Ba‘dān, also Raymah, etc., were in the district of Saḥūl.

Ibn Khaldūn, as will be seen, distinctly says that Mudhaykhirah and ‘Aden-Lā‘ah were close to one another (supra, p. 173), misled probably by Yāqūt or by Ibn Sa‘id, from whom, as I have already had occasion to say, he seems to have borrowed freely.

I may here add that Ibn Khaldūn commits a similar error when he speaks (supra, p. 168) of Aden-Abyan as a separate and distant place from the well-known seaport of Aden. They are in fact one and the same.*

The town of ‘Aden-Lā‘ah stood probably on or close to the banks of the Wādi Lā'ah, an important affluent of the Wādi Maur, one that retains its name to the present day. A similarity of name, taken by itself, must, it is true, count for little and may, indeed, at times be very misleading.* But other evidence is not wanting. Al-Hamdāni tell us, p. 69, l. 1) that Lā'ah was situated in the Sarāt or mountain-range of al-Masāni'. At p. 112, he tells us that Lā'ah marked the beginning of the country of Ḥāshid, north-west of Ṣan'ā. Other passages from the same author are to the same effect (p. 106, l. 23; 113, l. 19; 193, l. 12). We are distinctly told, moreover (supra, pp. 194, 195, etc.), that 'Aden-Lā'ah was in the neighbourhood of Ḥajjah and of Jabal Maswar, both which will be found on Dr. Glaser's map. Al-Janadi tells us (fol. 6 obv.) that 'Aden-Lā'ah, "one of the towns of Ḥajjah in which Manṣūr al-Yaman proclaimed the 'Obaydite supremacy," had long been in ruins.

Al-Hamdāni mentions another important mountain in the Masāni' range, Jabal Tukhla (pp. 69 and 190 sqq.). In his detailed account of the mountain, of the roads that wind round it, its villages and strongholds, the productiveness of its soil, its healthy climate, its freedom from noxious animals and insects, our author writes in a glowing style, by no means usual with him.

Though not attaining the elevation of the highest summits of the Masāni', it overlooks, he tells us, a wide extent of country. On the south, Bura', Ḥarāz and other mountains are distinctly visible. On the west, the view extends from the centre of the country of the Ḥakamites to Mahjam, and the white stream of the Wādi Maur is seen glistening through the haze that rests upon the plains of Tihāmah. Farther away is spread the sapphire-tinted sea, and, in the extreme distance, those endowed with superior powers of vision may distinguish the Farasān Islands. On the east the view is obstructed by the higher range of the Masāni'.

I feel somewhat at a loss to identify the mountain on the

* Reynaud, in his translation of Abu 'l-Fada's Geography, has thus been misled into correcting a supposed error of his author. He adds a footnote to his translation, in which he declares that Sharjah was not a seaport. It is true that Niebuhr mentions an inland village named Sharjah, south of Ḥays.

map published by Dr. Glaser in the "Mittheilungen," but he mentions its name, and says that it stands due west of Jabal Maswar.

'Omārah, still following Ibn Hauḳal and al-Iṣṭakhri, proceeds (supra, p. 7) with an account of Shibām. Besides one in Haḍramaut, there were two places in Yaman of that name. One stood on the mountains of Harāz, situated between Wādi Sahām and Wādi Surdud (Hamdāni, p. 105). The other, which Hamdāni calls Shibām-Aḳyān, stood close to Kaukabān, at the foot of the mountain of Dhukhār, whence the river Surdud has its source (ib. p. 106-7). Both these places are marked upon Dr. Glaser's map.

The province of Aḳyān, according to Hamdāni, belonged to the Hawwālis or Banu Ya'fur. He adds that the country was the scene of the contests, whereby Ya'fur ibn 'Abd ar-Rahmān, in the days of al-Mu'taṣim, of al-Wāthik, and of al-Mutawakkil, raised himself to power.

Yāḳūt, in his Mushtarik, mentions still another place named Shibām, three parasangs north-east of Ṣan'ā, but this, I think, requires confirmation.

Shibām in Haḍramaut was, says Hamdāni, the chief city of the province. It had thirty mosques, but half the town was in his day in ruins. Its original name, he adds, was Shibāt (pp. 86, l. 25; 87, l. 25).

NOTE 12 to p. 8.—The "statement of revenue" and the particulars that follow are simply borrowed, with some slight exaggeration, from Ibn Hauḳal (De Goeje's ed. p. 20), and the same remark applies to the information supplied (supra, pp. 5 and 7) respecting As'ad ibn Ya'fur and Ibn Ṭarf. In Ibn Hauḳal, the distance from Sharjah to Aden is stated at twelve, instead of at twenty days' journey.

The 'Aththariyah dinār, according to al-Muḳaddasi (p. 99), was two-thirds of a mithḳal, the standard or original weight of a dinār. It would therefore be equal to about seven shillings in gold of modern money. See also Professor de Goeje's glossary to Ibn Hauḳal and al-Muḳaddasi, p. 296.

Ibn Hauḳal calls the Prince of Hali al-Khazāmi, but Müller's edition of al-Hamdāni (p. 120, l. 12, and 14) gives the reading al-Hirāmi.

NOTE 13 to p. 9.—According to Khazraji (p. 78), Muḥammad ibn Ziyād died in A.H. 245. His son Ibrāhīm, he continues, died in A.H. 289, after a reign of thirty-eight years (sic). Next to Ibrahīm followed Ziyād son of Ibrahīm, who did not long reign and the date of whose death the writer is unable to give. Abu 'l-Jaysh Ishāk succeeded his brother Ziyād, and is said to have reigned eighty years. He is stated by Khazraji to have died in A.H. 391, for which we must read 371, as in our text and in Janadi. This would place his accession in A.H. 291, and would give a duration of two years to the reign of his brother and predecessor Ziyād. The latter may have been the prince who is reported to have been killed when Zabīd was captured and looted by the Karmathians under 'Aly ibn Faḍl (supra, p. 200); but as the capture of Zabīd must have occurred after A.H. 292, when Ibn Faḍl conquered Mudhaykhirah, it may with at least equal plausibility be conjectured that it was really Abu 'l-Jaysh who was attacked, and that he did not lose his life. But how, on the other hand, are we to believe that Abu 'l-Jaysh, at the end of a reign of eighty years, left an infant son to succeed him? (See Note 98.)

Al-Mas'ūdi says (vol. iii. p. 35) that in his day (A.H. 332 or shortly after) the Prince of Zabīd was Ibrahīm ibn Ziyād, which adds to our difficulties. The Prince, he further tells us, bore the surname Ṣāhib al-Ḥarmali, which I have nowhere else met with.

A valuable date is supplied by a dinār, published by Mr. S. Lane-Poole in the Journal of the Numismatic Society (1887, part iv.). The coin purports to have been struck by Abu 'l-Jaysh Ishāk, at Zabīd, in A.H. 346, and it bears the name of the 'Abbasside Khalīfah al-Muṭi' (A.H. 334-363).

Of the last princes of the dynasty we are told next to nothing, and even their names are doubtful. That of the infant successor of Abu 'l-Jaysh was, according to our text, either 'Abd Allah, or Ziyād. According to al-Janadi and Khazraji, it was 'Abd Allah, or Ziyād, or Ibrahīm. After the death, in A.H. 402, of Husayn ibn Salāmah, who we are told, ruled the country as Wazīr for about thirty years, we find another child on the throne, the last of his race, to whom al-Janadi gives the name 'Abd Allah. In our text he is called 'Abd Allah at p. 13 and Ibrahīm at p. 15. He was assassinated in A.H. 409.

Al-Janadi (fol. 184 rev.) says it may clearly be shown, that the Banu Ziyād held supreme rule for one hundred and sixty-eight years, from A.H. 203 to 371. From that date until the death of the last prince in 409, they reigned, he continues, as titular sovereigns, for thirty-eight years. Next followed a struggle between Najāḥ and Anīs, which endured for three years, until 412, when Najāḥ became supreme ruler. He and his descendants and their wazīrs, adds al-Janādī, ruled for 145 years, including the three years of war between Najāḥ and Anīs, that is to say, from 409 to 554, when Zabīd was captured by Ibn Mahdy.

The original passage of which the above is the substance, will be found in Note 98. In the MSS. both of al-Janādī and Khazraji, the year 407 is given as the date at which the Ziyādite dynasty came to an end, and so it is also to be found in Dayba' and in al-Ahdal. Al-Janādī's own words, however, show conclusively that A.H. 409, as in our text, is the correct date.* It must be remarked that 'Omārah tells us Zabīd was founded in A.H. 204, the year in which the Imām ash-Shāfi' died. Al-Janādī (fol. 29 obv.) gives the same date for the conquest of Tihāmah and for the foundation of the city, stating, however, likewise, that Ibn Ziyād arrived in A.H. 203.

The freedman of Abu 'l-Jaysh, Rushd, the master of Husayn ibn Salāmah, is also so styled by al-Janādī and by Ibn Khallikān. Al-Khazraji and Ibn Khaldūn give him the name of Rashīd.

The assassin of the last Prince of the Ziyādite dynasty is called in our text Nafīs, نفيس, and so also in Khazraji. Ibn Khallikān and Ibn Khaldūn give him the name of Kays, قيس; Al-Janādī that of Anīs, انيس. He specifies the orthography and vocalization of the name and elsewhere returns to the point (see Note 65). He is followed by al-Ahdal (p. 264 obv.), but the latter adds that other writers call him Nafīs.

NOTE 14 to p. 10.—Mu'ādh ibn Jabal, of the tribe of Khazraj, was sent to Yaman by the Prophet, and remained there until the latter's death. He himself died at 'Amwas (Emmaus) in A.H. 18. His life is given by Ibn al-Athīr in his biographies of the Sahābis, the Uṣd al-Ghābah, "the Lions of the Jungle" (Bul. ed. vol. iv. p. 377). It contains the following passage, which tends to bear out a suggestion I have elsewhere had occasion to offer (Journal of the

* All Arabic students are aware how easily the words signifying seven and nine may be mistaken for one another, and how frequently the mistake occurs.

R. A. S. vol. xiv. p. 240), that the word al-Kayyūm, in the Ayat al-Kursy, ought in accordance with the definition of the commentators, to be rendered the Watchful, or the Vigilant.

كان معاذ اذا تہجد من اللیل قال اللہم نامت العیون و غارت النجوم و انت حی
فیوم اللہم طلی الجنة بطیء و هربى من النار ضعيف اللہم اجعل لى عندك هدى
ترده الی يوم القيامة انك لا تخلف الميعد .

When Mu'adh devoted a night to watchfulness and prayer, he was in the habit of using the following words :—

“O God, the eyes of men are closed in sleep, the stars are sinking into the mighty deep, whilst Thou, the Living, Thy never-ending watch dost keep. O God, my yearnings for heaven have been tardy, my strivings to escape the fires of hell have been weak. O God, grant unto me true guidance, in Thy keeping, which Thou wilt restore to me on the day of resurrection. And verily, thou wilt not fail in Thy promises.”

NOTE 15 to p. 11.—Sharjah and Aththar were two important seaports on the coast of Northern Yaman. I am not able to identify their precise position, but careful comparison of the information supplied by various writers renders it possible to determine their sites approximatively, pending the time when further inquiry, or perhaps investigation on the spot, may enable the point to be settled with absolute precision.

Ibn Buṭūṭah landed at Sharjah on his way down the Red Sea, in the fourteenth century. He describes it as a place occupied by merchants of Ṣa'dah. Then he sailed to the New Haven,* where, however, he did not land, and then on to al-Ahwāb.

Al-Hamdāni, in describing the coast of Yaman, proceeding from south to north (p. 52), next after Kamarān mentions 'Uṭaynah. At p. 120, l. 1, we read 'Iṭnah instead of the diminutive form 'Uṭaynah, and the author says that it and al-Hirdah are the ports of al-Mahjam. Al-Muḥaddasi (p. 53) writes 'Iṭnah.

* The New Haven, Marsa 'l-Hādith, is doubtless either Luhayy or Hudaydah. The earliest mention I have met with of the former is in Dayba's account of the invasion and conquest of Yaman by the forces of the Egyptian Sultān al-Ghūri. The army, composed of Circassians, Kurds and other Asiatics, landed in the Island of Kamarān in Dhu 'l-Kā'dah A.H. 921 (December, 1515). Their first operations were directed against the seaport town of Jadidah (Hudaydah?), which was looted and destroyed. The Governor of Luhayy tendered his submission and actively assisted the invading army in its advance into the interior. Zabid was taken in Jamād Awwal, 922. The conquest of the country was completed in Rabī 'Awwal

Next to 'Uṭaynah, Hamdāni mentions Hirdah, then Munfahik Jābir, a dangerous headland, where (violent) winds are frequent. Its limits extend to Sharjah, the seaport of the country of the Banu Ḥakam. Next Bāḥat Jāzān and on to 'Aththar. At the headland of 'Aththar the sea, he says, is remarkable for its heavy waves. See also p. 188, where, as well as at p. 120, the author mentions Wādi Ḥaraḍ among other places in the country of the Ḥakamites.

Al-Ahdal (fol. 5 obv.) says that Sharjah is the port of Ḥaraḍ, Sāhil Ḥoraḍ, and Khazraji gives it the name of Sharjat Ḥaraḍ, which practically conveys the same meaning.

Ibn Ḥātim tells us (fol. 2 obv., see Note 101), that Ḥaraḍ was also called Muḥall Abi Turāb. I find "Harrad" marked upon Walker's and other modern maps of Arabia. Its situation corresponds with the indications given by the Arab writers, and I think we may conclude that the port of Sharjah stood at or not far from the spot, which on the Admiralty chart bears the name of Ras Musahib, about thirty-three miles north of Luḥayy, or it may be somewhat farther south. It is hardly necessary to say that the village of the name of Sharjah, marked on Niebuhr's and subsequent maps south of Zabīd, is an entirely different place. I have met with no mention of it in any of the Arab writers I have had occasion to consult.

of the following year, when the last Sulṭān of Yaman, defeated and flying before the invader, was killed near Ṣan'ā.

It is a somewhat remarkable circumstance that whilst an Egyptian army was occupied in subjugating Yaman, the Turks under Sulṭān Selīm were engaged in the conquest of Egypt, and Ṭumān-Bay, the last Mamlūk Sulṭān, was hanged by order of Selīm at Cairo, a few days before the Sulṭān of Yaman was killed.

The Egyptian army in Yaman comprised, according to Dayba', a formidable body of 1000 men armed with matchlocks, lent to al-Ghūri by Sulṭān Selīm. These, however, had been supplied, not for purposes of conquest, but to assist the Egyptians in resisting the Franks, who had made their appearance in the southern seas, and were intercepting the road to India.

As to 'Aththar, according to Hamdāni as quoted above, it stood north of Bahūt Jūzān, which may be presumed to be the same as Gizan of the Admiralty chart. At p. 54 he calls the place 'Athr, but the Arabs, he continues, generally pronounce the name 'Aththar. It is, he says, the port of Baysh (the same perhaps as Bish of modern maps). 'Itwad, he adds, is a village in the plains of 'Aththar, both which places, he continues, are well-known haunts of lions. (See also p. 127, l. 16.) "Etwid" is mentioned on the Admiralty chart. Al-Ahdal (fol. 5 obv.) says that 'Athr (sic) was a village situated between Ḥali and Ḥaraḍ, and, he adds, has long been in ruins. Opposite it, he continues, is an island that bears its name. Muḳaddasi, who I need hardly remind the reader writes at a very much earlier date, calls 'Aththar (sic) a large and well-known city. At Baysh, where the Sulṭān or chief resides, the air, he says, is healthier and the water purer.

The only map upon which I have found 'Aththar to be marked, is a Spanish sixteenth century map of the world, of which a copy exists in the India Office Library.

NOTE 16 to p. 12.—Of the numerous other places described as standing on the pilgrim roads from Yaman, besides those referred to in the preceding notes, there are several which I am not able to identify.

Dhāt al-Khayf stands in Khazraji (fol. 60) Dhāt al-Hubayt or al-Khubayt. Mauza' must surely be the "emporium" marked on Ptolemy's map, but it is somewhat puzzling to find it described by our author as an inland town. Ibu al-Mujāwir, however, mentions it (apud Sprenger, p. 149) as a seaport south of As-Suḥāri, al-Khauhah and Maushij (travelling from north to south). Al-Hamdāni mentions the town, but is not clear as to its precise position. Al-Jadūn is written in Khazraji al-Ḥadūn. Aḍ-Dijā' is somewhat vaguely described by Yāḳūt as a town near Zabīd. Both al-Jaththah and 'Irḳ an-Nasham are omitted by Khazraji, but al-Jaththah الجثث is mentioned in the Marāsīd as a village in Yaman. Al-Wadiyāni is mentioned by Yāḳūt as an important town in the province of Zabīd, from which a large revenue is collected; but it will be observed that 'Omārah invariably speaks of it as north of Maljam and Maur. Jizān might be taken to be the same as Gizan or Bāḥat Jūzān mentioned in the preceding note, but it is not given as a seaport, which the latter is. In Khazraji the name is written Ḥayrān, and Jizān may perhaps be better identified with Ḥayrān, which is mentioned by Hamdāni (p. 120) along with Wādi Ta'shar, as a town in the country of the Banu Ḥakam. Al-Musā'id is called by Khazraji as-Sā'id, and the name is so written in al-Hamdāni (p. 119, l. 26). Al-Mabni and Riyāh (?) are given by Khazraji, but I have nowhere else met with any mention of them. Instead of al-Lith, Khazraji has al-Ḥabt (Khabt?), but al-Lith is mentioned by Ibn Khurdadbah (p. 148) and by Hamdāni (p. 120, l. 16). Al-Bayḍā and Wādi Rukmah (?) by the same writer in the next line. Khazraji writes Bīr al-Bayḍā instead of al-Bayḍā, but Ibn al-Mujāwir, according to Sprenger, gives it the same name as in our MS. Khazraji has Bīr Adām instead of Bīrūd. We may perhaps read Ayḍum, the name given by Ibn al-Mujāwir (Sprenger, p. 131.) The names of the first stations travelling southward from Mecca, as given by him, are as follows:—

From Mecca to al-Ḳarīn, then to al-Bayḍā, then to Ayḍām. Next to Wādi Mufḥram (Yalamlam ?) where the Yamanite pilgrims assume the Iḥrām.

Sabakhat al-Ghurāb is so given by Khazraji. Ibn al-Mujāwir (Sprenger, p. 150) mentions a place al-Bayḍā in the desert or Ḳū' of Sabakhat al-Ghurāb, near Aden, which I do not know how to account for. Al-Ḳarīn is mentioned by al-Muḳaddasi, as standing between Mecca and Juddah, Na'mān, or Na'man al-Arāk, is described by Yāḳūt and is also mentioned by Ibn al-Mujāwir (Sprenger, p. 125).

The following is Khazraji's version of the road between Yalamlam and Mecca:—

Then the travellers reach Yalamlam, the Miḳāt of the people of Yaman (the place where the Yamanite pilgrims assume the garb and commence the ceremonies attendant upon the performance of pilgrimage). Yalamlam has a well, constructed by Ibn Salāmah. Next is Bīr (the well of) Adām, which yields an abundant supply of drinking water. It is ten fathoms in length (depth) and it is five fathoms in width. Then the roads diverge. He whose destination is Mecca reaches Bīr al-Bayḍā, a well constructed by Ibn Salāmah, next al-Ḳarīn and then Mecca.

Of the places on the maritime road, al-Makhnak is mentioned by Hamdāni (p. 188, l. 14). 'Athr (?), on the southern coast, I was once inclined to think might be the same as 'Abrah of Hamdāni (p. 188, l. 15); but although omitted in the MS. of Khazraji, it is given by Dayba', and it is moreover mentioned by Ibn al-Mujāwir (Sprenger, p. 150), as distant three parasangs from 'Ārah. Next to Bāb al-Mandab our MS. has as-Suhāri. Hamdāni writes Ṣuhāri, Ibn al-Majāwir (apud Sprenger, p. 149) gives the name as in our text, but he places Suhāri north of Khauhah, and it is so marked on the Admiralty chart. Al-Hirdah and 'Itnah, as stated in the preceding note, are mentioned by Hamdāni as the ports of al-Mahjam. For al-Mufajjar we may perhaps read Hajar (Hamdāni, p. 188, Sprenger, 133). Duwaymah and Hamidah are referred to by al-Muḳaddasi (p. 69 and footnote), and the last-mentioned by Hamdāni (p. 52, l. 14 and 120, l. 16).

Hamdāni says (p. 51, 13) that Ḥamidah stood near a mountain which he calls Kudummul. The name Kotumble appears on the Admiralty chart, but is given to a small island near the coast. See Müller's Notes, p. 33.

NOTE 17 to p. 12.—Niebuhr heard a precisely similar anecdote (vol. i. p. 302), with the addition that in order to prevent a repetition of so troublesome a miracle, the donor of the money ordered the tomb of the royal saint, who takes the part of the Prophet in the modern version of the story, to be securely walled up.

NOTE 18 to p. 15.—Maḳrīzi, in his Khiṭaṭ (vol. i. p. 448) gives the following description of the Imperial umbrella, which was borne on state occasions over the head of the Khalifah :—

The umbrella was composed of twelve segments, each three and a third cubits in length and one span (cubit?) in width at the lower end.* The upper extremities were extremely narrow. They were joined together and fitted round the end of the stem. This was a lance-shaft made of ash and enclosed in tubes of gold. The uppermost tube, which was close to the head of the shaft, was provided with a ledge forming part of itself and projecting to the extent of a thumb's width. The extremities of the segments were made fast to a golden ring, which was loosely fitted on to the head of the shaft, the latter being here reduced in thickness. The ring, coming in contact with the ledge, was supported and prevented from slipping down the shaft. The umbrella had square ribs made of Khalanj wood, equal in number to the segments and of the same length. They were light in weight and coated with gold. They were fitted with small hooks and there were rings to correspond, the hooks and rings fastening into one another. The umbrella could be closed and opened after the manner of the folding segments of a leathern purse (?). The stem was surmounted by a ball the shape of a pomegranate, above which was another similar ball of a smaller size. Both were of gold, studded with jewels, conspicuous (by their brilliancy) to the spectator. The umbrella had a valance, which encircled the opening and was of corresponding material. The valance exceeded a span and a half in depth. Below the pomegranate-shaped ball, there was a space of about three finger-breadths. Upon the ring, to which the extremities of the segments were attached, being placed on the end of the shaft, the ball was fitted over it. It was wrapped in a piece of Dabikite cloth of gold,* which was removed by the bearer upon the umbrella being delivered to him.

* Maḳrīzi has previously mentioned that the umbrella, as well as the Khalifah's robes, was white, the Fatimite colour. The colour of the 'Abbasides, it will be remembered was black, to this day that of the covering over the Ka'bah at Mecca.

NOTE 19 to p. 16.—Al-Janadi states (fol. 182 obv.), that when the Karmathian dominion came to an end (A.H. 304), Yaman became subject to three families or dynasties, between whom the whole country was divided. The Banu Ziyād ruled over Zabīd (Tihāmah) and Aden. Ṣa‘dah and the country on the north were in the possession of the Zaydite Imāms. Janad as well as the city and province of Ṣan‘ā was held by the Banu Ya‘fur.

As‘ad ibn Ya‘fur appointed the Himyarite family, the Banu Kurandi, to be governors of the province of Janad. When, upon the death of Ibn Salāmah in A.H. 402, the governors appointed by the Banu Ziyād usurped absolute power over their provinces, the Banu Kurandi likewise declared their independence. They were deprived of their kingdom by ‘Aly the Ṣulayḥite, and the deposed prince, as will be seen, was one of the chiefs who accompanied aṣ-Ṣulayḥi to al-Mahjam, and one of the few whose life was spared by Sa‘īd son of Najāḥ. Some of these fortresses, as is stated by Ibn Khaldūn, were restored to the Banu Kurandi by al-Mnkarram Aḥmad son of ‘Aly, and of these they continued in possession until they were deprived of their principality by Ibn Mahdy. Abu ‘Abd Allah al-Ḥusayn ibn at-Tubba‘y appears to have been the chief of the family at the time of its restoration. The part he took in the scheme to which Sa'īd son of Najāh fell a victim, is related further on, and it may be noticed that he is there styled Prince of Sha'ir.

Al-Hamdāni says (p. 54, l. 21) that the family of Kurandi belonged to the Banu Thumāmah, descendants of Ḥimyar al-Asghar (ancestor of the Banu Ya'fur and Banu Auzā').

The following is al-Khazraji's enumeration of the petty dynasties that sprang up in Yaman upon the death of Ibn Salāmah in A.H. 402, and of the territories and fortresses which they appropriated (fol. 83):—

The governors of the mountain districts and fortresses took possession of that with which they were entrusted. Among others, the Hamdanites seized upon Ṣan'ā, as already mentioned.

The Banu Ma'n took possession of Aden, of Laḥj, of Abyan, of Shihr and of Ḥaḍramaut. They are not descendents of Ma'n ibn Zā'idah the Shaybānite. The Banu Kurandi, a family descended from Ḥimyar, possessed themselves of Samadān, an exceedingly important fortress, of the strongholds of Sawā, of Dunlūwah, of Ṣabir, of Dhakhir and of Ta'kar, a fortress which commands Janad.* They made themselves masters of (large portions of) the provinces of Ja'far, of 'Unnah and of al-Ma'āfir. 'Omārah says of the Banu Kurandi that they held brilliant sway over their possessions, and were a conquering race of kings. Abu 'Abd Allah al-Ḥusayn ibn at-Tubba'y took possession of the fortress of Ḥabb, which resembles in strength at-Ta'kar, also of Azzān, of Khadid, of Bayt 'Izz, of the fortresses of Sha'ir, of Abwar (Anwar), of Naqil, of Saḥūl and of Shawāfi.

The Banu Wā'il ibn 'Īsa seized upon Wuḥāzah and upon its strongholds, Yarīs, Zahrān, al-Khaḍrā, Sa'ab and Yafūz. The Banu Wā'il are descended from Dhu 'l-Kalā'. They are an ancient race of rulers, but they are a silly folk, who fancy themselves to be absolutely the noblest of mankind. Among others of the family, was As'ad ibn Wā'il, noted for his generous qualities and for the praise of which he was the theme. He was a pious man, and upheld the orthodox sect of the Sunnis, above all others. He sought the companionship of Ḳur'ān readers and of worshippers, he held in high honour the practice of frequenting the mosques. He venerated the early Companions of the Prophet and followed the good examples of those who protected their names from insult. He was free from all taint of new doctrines. He was slain (and died a martyr) in the year 515, and was buried in the mosque of al-Ja'āmi (al-Ju'fy?).

* The name of this fortress, and of that of the same name at Aden, is thus given in the Ḳamūs, Ta'kar, and it would appear to have been generally so pronounced. But in Müller's Hamdāni, it is for the most part written Ta'kur, which, or its alternative Ta'kir, is perhaps the more correct orthography.

Al-Janadi tells us (fol. 191 rev.) that the castle of Ta'kar above Dhu Jiblah was demolished in A.H. 594 by the Ayyubite Sulḡān al-Mu'izz Isma'il.

I omit the words that follow, evidently an imperfect rendering of the passage in 'Omārah, wherein he speaks of the fortresses and territories taken by a family of the tribe of Bakil and by that of 'Abd al-Wāḥid.

- Al-Khazraji has borrowed these particulars from al-Janadi, but in the Paris MS. of the latter (p. 183 obv.), the sense is partially obscured by what seems to be a copyist's error, the omission probably of one, or it may be, of two lines. I have therefore preferred Khazraji's version.

NOTE 20 to p. 16.—Ma'n ibn Zā'idah, of the Ishmaelite tribe of Shaybān and of the great Sept of Rabī'ah, was appointed governor of Yaman by the Abbaside Khalīfah al-Manṣūr 'Abd Allah. His life is given by Ibn Khallikān (de Slane, vol. iii. p. 598), and from al-Janadi (fol. 27 obv.) it appears that he was Governor of Yaman from A.H. 145 to 151. It will be seen that the claim of the Banu Ma'n of Aden to be descendants of Ma'n ibn Zā'idah is mentioned by Ibn Khaldūn and distinctly contradicted by al-Khazraji (see the preceding note), as well as by 'Omārah.

NOTE 21 to p. 17.—The Imām Mālīk ibn Anas al-Aṣḥabī was the founder of one of the four great schools into which the Sunnite Muhammadans are divided. He was born, lived and died at Medīnah, for which reason he is styled Imām of the City of the Flight.

NOTE 22 to p. 17.—The places mentioned on this and the preceding page were situated, as will be seen, in the Mikhlāf Ja'far, but, with few exceptions, I have been unable to ascertain their position. Dumlūwah is mentioned by Niebuhr in his Description of Arabia (p. 212) and is marked upon his map, a short distance east of Ta'izz. Hamdāni's description of the fortress will be found in Note 111. The fortresses of Ṣabir and Dhakhir stood without doubt on the mountains after which they appear to be named. These two mountains, according to al-Hamdāni, are separated by an opening, in which stands the town and fortress of Jabā, the residence of the Banu Kurandy (p. 99, l. 6). Mount Ṣabir, he adds (l. 21), separates Jabā from Janad. The valley of 'Unnah, so named after a sub-tribe of Ḥimyar, was watered by a stream which flowed into the Wādi Zabīd (Hamdāni, p. 71, l. 16; 100, l. 5). I find no mention of Sawā (supra, p. 131) in al-Hamdāni, nor of Samadān, which is stated to have been one of the most important fortresses in Yaman. According to Yāqūt, the former stood upon Mount Ṣabir.

The Mountain of Habb was, according to Hamdāni, in the country of Dhu Ru'ayn (p. 101, l. 12). It cannot have been far from the town of Ibb, perhaps to the eastward, and overlooking the valley that extends downwards and sweeps round Jabal Khubbān. I do not find the name of Ibb in Hamdāni, and although it and Habb are mentioned as separate places by 'Omārah (supra, p. 131), there seems to me reason to suspect that the two may turn out to be, at least to all intents and purposes, one and the same place.

Khadid is so written in Müller's Hamdāni. In the British Museum MS. of Ibn Khaldūn, it is pointed Khudad. Yāqūt has Khadad, and he merely says that it was a fortress situated in Mikhlāf Ja'far. Hamdāni tells us (p. 78, l. 17), that it stood at a distance of an hour's journey from the castle of the Wuhāzites, and that it contained a magnificent palace.

It is reached by two roads leading to the gates of the castle, near each of which there is a supply of water. Close to the road on the south side there is a cistern (Karīf?) known by the name of al-Wafayt, excavated in black rock. Its depth is fifty cubits. Its width twenty, and its length fifty cubits. It is protected and surrounded by a wall, to prevent accidents. The other source of water supply is close to the northern gate. It is a pit in the rock like a well, lined with masonry composed of flag stones. There are steps whereby the water can be reached from the summit of the castle, with the help of torches, both by day and by night. It takes an hour's time to reach the water, and a person at the entrance of the well cannot be distinguished from above.

The Castle of Khadid must, I conclude, have stood on the north or north-west of Ibb.

'Azzān, according to Yāqūt, stood on the mountain of Raymah in the country of al-Manākhi, not far, therefore, from al-Mudhaykhirah. Yāqūt mentions also 'Azzān-Khabt on Mount Ṣabir near Ta'izz, and 'Azzān-Dhakhir, which he says stood on Mount Ṣabir likewise. Bayt 'Izz, as we have seen (Note 6), stood in the country of al-Manākhi; and ash-Sha'ir, so written by al-Janadi, the place where Sa'īd son of Najāh met his death, must likewise have been in that neighbourhood, or near the banks of the Wādi Saḥūl. Janadi, instead of Nur has Anwar (supra, Note 19). This place is mentioned by Yāqūt, who says it stood in Mikhlāf Ḳayzān. Hamdāni makes mention of Ḳaynān, which, he says, was in the district of Saḥūl, and in the northern part of the country of Dhu 'l-Kalā' (p. 100, l. 15; 68, 6). An-Nakīl (the mountain pass) is doubtless Nakīl Ṣayd, near Yaḥḍib al-'Ulu, or the ruined city of Zafār. Saḥūl stood in the district of Dhu 'l-Kalā', and it is likewise the name of a stream that flowed into Wādi Zabīd. (Hamdāni, p. 68, l. 4; 71, 15.) Instead of Shawāḳi we must read, as in al-Janadi, Shawāfi, which according to Hamdāni was one of the inhabited places in the province of Saḥūl (p. 100, l. 16). It is mentioned by the author of the Marāṣid.

Wuḥāzah is described by al-Hamdāni as part of the low-lying lands of the district of Dhu 'l-Kalā' and contained a castle of the same name, also called Subā' (p. 68, l. 6; 78, 15). The name Baybars is without doubt erroneous. Al-Janadi and Khazraji write Yarīs (رس). The same writers have Zahrān and Sa'b (Sha'b?) instead of Dahwān and Sha'r. Yāḳūt says that al-Khadrā and al-Yābis are a fortress (sic) on Mount Wuṣāb. Al-Janadi says of Shāḥiṭ that it had formerly been the abode of kings, but that it had lost its importance. It is mentioned by Yāḳūt, but he adds nothing to what we are told by 'Omārah. He includes the verses given in our text, which he doubtlessly borrows from our author. Their point consists in the double signification of the principal words, and their more obvious meaning is so gross, that I have gladly exempted myself from the task of rendering it in English. I may here mention that al-Hamdāni explains (p. 84, l. 12) that the word al-Ghā'it is used in Yaman to signify the desert.

Jahjab, mentioned a few lines farther on, is marked on Manzoni's map (Gebgeb), and is referred to by Hamdāni, (p. 68, l. 5, 12; 104, 17). Wuṣāb al-'Aly and Wuṣāb al-'Asfal are identified by Glaser with Jublān al-'Arkabah, which Hamdāni tells us (p. 103, 12) stood between Wādi Zabīd and Wādi Rima', adding elsewhere (p. 71, 22) that Wādi Rima' flows between Jublān al-'Arkabah and Jublān Raymah.

NOTE 23 to p. 18.—The Hamdānite sister tribes of Ḥāshid and Bakil were, as is mentioned by Ibn Khaldūn on the authority of al-Bayhaḳi and of Ibn Ḥazm (supra, p. 175), the progenitors of most of the subdivisions of the Banu Hamdān. The Banu Bakil and Banu Ḥāshid were closely allied, and held high rank among the most powerful Arab communities in Yaman. And they have, in fact, continued, as is shown by Niebuhr, to occupy that position down to the present day. The Banu Yām, to which the Sulayhites and the family of Zuray' belonged, were a subdivision of the Banu Ḥāshid.

According to Hamdāni (p. 109), the country of his tribesmen extended from Ṣan'ā to Ṣa'dah.* The Banu Bakil, he adds, possessed, as a general rule, the country on the east of a line drawn from Şan'ā to Şa'dah and the Banu Ḥāshid that on the west. The latter owned also the district of al-Waḥsh, the western portion of the province of Saḥūl, lying next to the country of Dhu 'l-Kalā' and enclosed by the streams that combine to form the River Zabīd. (Hamdāni, p. 100, 20)

* Ṣa'dah belonged to the Banu Khaulān and in pre-Islamic times it bore the name of Jamā' (Hamdāni, p. 67.)

NOTE 24 to p. 18.—Jabal Burā' is described by Hamdāni as a north-westerly extension of Jublān Raymah, standing between Wādi Rīma' and Wādi Sabām, precisely as is shown in Dr. Glaser's map. The name al-'Amal (?). I have not met with elsewhere. Lī'sān, according to Dr. Glaser's map and as described by Hamdāni, extends to the western slopes of Ḥarāz. Masār is one of the important group of mountains known by the name of Ḥarāz.

It will be seen by what follows at p. 44, that most of the strongholds above mentioned, were held at a subsequent period by the family of Muẓaffar the Sulayhites. Among other places there mentioned are Maḥr, az-Zarf and Dhu Rassah, touching which I have met with no information. Kawarīr is referred to by Khazraji (supra, Note 5). For Zafār we may perhaps read Zajirān, mentioned by Yāḳūt as a fortress situated on the Mountain of Wuṣāb. The mountain of Raymah stood in the neighbourhood of Thaumān, and is consequently a different place from Jublān Raymah above referred to. 'Omārah speaks elsewhere (pp. 4 and 132) of Raymat al-Ashā'ir, and al-Janadi of Raymat al-Manākhī (supra, Note 6). See also Raymah in Hamdāni, p. 68, 4. The fortress of Raymat al-Kalā' of the last mentioned (p. 125, 22), is referred to as separate and distinct from Raymah, and he speaks also of Mount Raymān in the same locality, that is to say, next to the mountain of Ba'dān (p. 71, 16; 100, 21; 125, 6). Ba'dān and Raymān appear to have been the names of tribes inhabiting the province of Saḥūl (p. 100, 7), after which the mountains were doubtless named. Jublān was likewise (p. 103, 17) the name borne by the ancestor of certain Ḥimyarite tribes.

The word Raymān must probably in certain cases be understood in its natural sense, a hill.

NOTE 25 to p. 19.—Al-Janadi (fol. 183 obv.) and also al-Abdal and al-Yāfi' write ar-Rawāḥiy بالراء والمهملتين. Yāḳūt repeats the statement in our text that az-Zawāḥi was a village in the district of Ḥarāz, to which he adds, "also in the district of an-Najm, situated where the country of Yaman commences." Hamdāni tells us (p. 120, 6) that the tribe or family of an-Najm inhabited al-Mahjam. He also mentions a place named az-Zawāhi (p. 100, 16), but it is distinctly described as situated in the district of Ṣaḥūl and in the country of Dhu 'l-Kalā', in other words therefore, in Mikhlāf Ja'far. I feel quite at a loss to suggest how these various statements are to be reconciled with one another.

NOTE 26 to p. 19.—This book is spoken of under the same title by al-Janadi and Khazraji, Kitāb aṣ-Ṣuwar. It is mentioned in the Bibliographical Dictionary, the Kashf az-Zunūn, in which it is stated that if the book ever existed, it consisted of three (astrological) treatises written by Aristotle.

It will be seen that Ibn Khaldūn gives the book in the possession of 'Amir the name of Kitāb al-Jafr. In his Prolegomena (translated by Baron de Slane), Ibn Khaldūn enters into considerable detail on the subject. The book, he tells us, was said to have been originally in the possession of Ja'far aṣ-Ṣādiq (the sixth Imām) and it contained particulars relating to the descendants of 'Aly, revealed by divine grace to Ja'far and other leading members of the family of 'Aly. Ja'far aṣ-Ṣādiq was said to have communicated its contents to a certain chief of the sect of the Zaydites, who committed them to writing. The book was named after the original copy Kitāb al-Jafr, because it was written upon sheets of kid-skin or vellum.*

Ibn Khaldūn remarks that the chain of tradition, whereby it is sought to vindicate the authority of the book, is faulty. What became of the original volume, he further states, is not known. But the Fatimites asserted that 'Obayd Allah was acquainted with its contents, and they cite examples in proof of the knowledge he and his associates had acquired of the future, as shown, for instance, in the case of Ibn Ḥaushab (Maṣṣūr al-Yaman), who, when he sent Abu 'Abd Allah ash-Shiya'y to North Africa, knew that there the destinies of the family of 'Aly were to be fulfilled, and the foundations of their empire to be laid. Abu 'Abd Allah himself, on his arrival in Africa, announced to the men of the Berber tribe of Katāmah that they were the people, bearing a name derived from mystery (al-Kitmān), who were destined to be champions of the Mahdy. (Ibn al-Athīr, viii. 24, Maḳrīzi, i. 350.)

In a curious extract from the Dastūr al-Munajjimīn printed by Professor de Goeje, one of the appendices to his work on the Karmathians of Bahrayn, it is stated that 'Obayd Allah, on starting from Egypt for North Africa, was attacked by robbers at a place called aṭ-Ṭahūmah. They plundered him of a large portion of his possessions; but his heaviest loss was that of certain books, in which the occult sciences of the Imāms, his forefathers, were contained. When 'Obayd Allah's son al-Ḳā'im, continues the writer, was sent forth on his first invasion of Egypt (A.H. 301), he succeeded in capturing the robbers, and he recovered possession of the books. On hearing thereof, the Mahdy rejoiced with exceeding joy. "The recovery of these books," he exclaimed, "is of itself a sufficient conquest." The anecdote, somewhat more briefly told, is to be found also in Ibn al-Athīr.

من علم الأسود المخصى مكرمةً اقوامه البيض أم أبؤه الصيد

NOTE 28 to p. 22.—The first of these two lines of verse is not given by al-Janadi, nor have I found it elsewhere. The name Asmā is regarded as derived from the verb wasama, with which the first line begins, and which signifies to mark, but it is also connected with the verb sama to be lofty, samā'u the sky, and with ism a name. Queen Bilḳīs is mentioned in Note 41.

NOTE 29 to p. 24.—This, according to both al-Khazraji and Ibn Khallikān, was in A.H. 453. Al-Janadi adds (p. 183 obv.) that aṣ-Ṣulayḥī's envoys were Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad, father of Sayyidah, who was killed at Aden by the falling in of a house at a time when his daughter was still in her childhood (Ah., p. 268), and that the other was Abu Saba Aḥmad ibn al-Muzaffar, father of Sulṭān Saba ibn Aḥmad. He further mentions that aṣ-Ṣulayḥī sent the Fatimite Khalīfah valuable presents, comprising seventy swords with cornelian handles. Al-Khazraji, after mentioning that aṣ-Ṣulayḥi proclaimed the supreme authority of the Fatimite Khalīfah al-Mustanṣir, proceeds as follows :—

When aṣ-Ṣulayḥi raised his standard on the mountain of Masār, where he was supported by a number of people of the tribes of Sinḥān, of Yam, of Jusham and of Habrah, a large army advanced against him led by (Ja'far) son of the Imām al-Kāsim ibn 'Alī, hereinbefore mentioned,* and by a man named Ja'far ibn al-'Abbās, who was a Shāfi'ite and greatly respected in the western districts of Upper Yaman. He marched along with Ja'far son of al-Kāsim at the head of 30,000 men, but was attacked in his encampment by aṣ-Ṣulayḥi in the month of Sha'bān of the year above mentioned. He was killed along with a large number of his followers and his army dispersed. Aṣ-Ṣulayḥi then ascended the mountain of Ḥaḍūr, took possession of it, and seized the fortress of Yanā'.† Ibn Abi Ḥāshid collected an army, and an engagement took place between them at Sauf, a village between Ḥaḍūr and Bīr Bani Shihāb. Ibn Abi Ḥāshid was killed together with one thousand of his followers. The name of the place has become proverbial in Yaman, in the phrase Slaughter of Sauf (i.e. great carnage). Aṣ-Ṣulayḥi then proceeded to Ṣan'ā and captured it. The whole of Yaman submitted to him, its hills and its plains (etc. as in 'Omārah).

At p. 48, l. 16, al-Khazraji says that aṣ-Ṣulayḥi subdued the whole country, from Mecca to Ḥaḍramaut, but that Sa'dah held out against him for a time, under the descendants of an-Nāṣir (Aḥmad). He however succeeded in slaying their chief and captured the city.

† Al-Hamdāni mentions Yanā' (p. 106, l. 12) as one of the places situated at the foot or on the lower slopes of Jabal Ḥaḍūr, which, he says, is so named after the ancestor of the Prophet Shu'ayb. Ḥaḍūr is one of the mountains of the Sarāt of Albān, which extends from Naqīl as-Sa'ūd to Ḥarāz, and it must not be confounded with Ḥaḍūr Bani Azd (Hamdāni, p. 68), farther north, one of the mountains of al-Masā'ī'. (See Glaser, p. 42-43.)

من اصحابه جمعا كثيرا فتفرق الناس عنه ثم طلع جبل حُضور فاستفتحته و اخذ حصن ساع فجمع له ابن ابى حاشد جمعا فالتقوا بصوف و هي قرية بين حضور و بير بنى شهاب فقتل ابن ابى حاشد و قتل معه الف رجل من اصحابه و بهذه البقعة يضرب المثل فى اليمن فيقال قلة صوف ثم سار الصليحي الى صنعاء فملكها فطوى اليمن طيا سهله و وعرة .

NOTE 30 to p. 29.—All these places, az-Zurā'ib, Jabalā 'Akād (the two mountains of 'Akād) and al-'Ukwatāni (the two 'Ukwas) are mentioned by Yākūt, who quotes the lines given in our text, but again adds nothing to what we are told by 'Omārah, excepting a statement that the mountains overlook Zabīd, which is manifestly wrong. 'Omārah tells us that they stood in the country of Ibu Ṭarf, or in other words in that of the Banu Ḥakam, the tribe to which 'Omārah belonged. Yākūt, instead of 'Akād as in the Ḳamūs and Tāj al-'Arūs, writes 'Ukkad.

NOTE 31 to p. 30.—A.H. 459 is the year given by Khazraji (p. 83) and also by Ibn al-Athīr (vol. x. p. 38). A comparison of dates shows that the death of aṣ-Ṣulayḥi must have occurred in A.H. 473, as stated by 'Omārah elsewhere (supra, p. 82), as well as in this passage, and also by Ibn Khallikān and by al-Janādī (fol. 183 obv. and rev.). It seems exceedingly probable that the words in our text, to the effect that the date 459 is assigned to the event and that it is to be preferred to the other, are an interpolation; but the error, it may be, proceeds from the confusion of an earlier expedition to Mecca with that projected in 473.

Ibn Khaldūn, in his chapter on the history of the Hāshimite Amīrs of Mecca (Bul. ed. iv. p. 103) says, as in his history of Yaman (supra, pp. 147 and 152), that the expedition of 473 was undertaken by command of the Fatimite Khalīfah, and that its purpose was the reinstatement of the Sulaymanites, in the place of Abu Hāshim Muḥammad son of Ja'far, who had renounced the Fatimite supremacy, and proclaimed that of the Abbasides.

Ibn al-Athīr mentions in his Chronicles (vol. x. pp. 19 and 38) that aṣ-Ṣulayḥi made himself master of Mecca in A.H. 455, and won praise by establishing order in the city, by adopting measures for the importation of food, and by extending protection to the pilgrims. He draped the Ka'bah with a covering of white china silk * and restored its treasures. These, continues the historian, had been carried to Yaman by the Ḥasanites, from whom they were repurchased by aṣ-Ṣulayḥi. See Dr. Snouck Hurgronje's Mekka, pp. 62 and 63-4. It will be noticed that Abu Ḥāshim Muḥammad was raised to the rulership of Mecca by aṣ-Ṣulayḥi.

NOTE 32 to p. 32.—The word al-Aḥwal may also be translated the Astute, and the latter is probably the sense in which it was applied to Sa'īd by his people.

NOTE 33 to p. 36.—Khazraji supplies us here with specimens of 'Aly the Sulayḥite's talents as a poet. They will be found in Baron de Slane's translation of Ibn Khallikān, vol. ii. p. 348.

NOTE 34 to p. 37.—See the description of a dinār of 'Imrān ibn Muḥammad, by Mr. S. Lane-Poole, in the catalogue of coins at the British Museum. The defaced and illegible word is probably Maliki.

NOTE 35 to p. 38.—'Omārah tells us (supra, pp. 41 and 42) that when al-Mukarram adopted Dhu Jiblah as his place of residence, he appointed As'ad ibn Shihāb over Ṣan'ā together with 'Imrān ibn al-Faḍl. We learn from al-Janādī (fol. 184 obv.) that As'ad, upon the death of Sa'īd (in 482), was transferred from Ṣan'ā to Zabīd. His expulsion by Jayyāsh occurred the same year. It is somewhat difficult to understand at what time As'ad ibn 'Arrāf can have ruled over the city; but it will be observed that our text is again in a very unsatisfactory condition at this particular point.

NOTE 36 to p. 40.—Yākūt, in his Geographical Dictionary, reproduces 'Omārah's derivation of the name Dhu Jiblah. But, as appears from Wüstenfeld's printed edition, an error has been committed by the author or by his transcribers, whereby the sense of the passage is singularly misrendered. It reads as follows:—

* See Note 18, footnote.

The words Dār al-'Izz wa bihi being misread, it becomes obvious that the sentence could not end with the word Summiyat. The writer has accordingly taken upon himself, according to a practice unhappily far too common, to add on his own authority the word b'ismiha, besides introducing a conjunction after bihi, and thus, whilst escaping one difficulty, he has plunged, without perceiving it, into another.

Yākūt says that Dhu Jiblah stood at the foot of Mount Sabir, an error which appears also in Ibn Sa'īd's Geography. It is in point of fact none other but the place shown in Niebuhr's and subsequent maps south-west of Ibb.

NOTE 37 to p. 42.—Al-Janadi says (fol. 184 obv.) that al-Mukarram died at Bayt Yūnis, or at the fortress of Ashyah, in A.H. 484 or in 480 or in 479. The context here and elsewhere (supra, p. 88) shows that al-Mukarram was living in 481. The same writer mentions that although Saba succeeded to the office of Dā'y (which could not be held by a woman), Sayyidah retained in her own hands full sovereignty or temporal power over her husband's dominions.

NOTE 38 to p. 43.—Al-Janadi (fol. 184 obv.) adds the following (see also al-Khazraji, p. 53)—whence it would appear that a passage is here omitted from our text.

'Omārah relates that Ibn al-Kumm, standing before Saba, recited the ode in which these lines occur. The Prince, on hearing the verses, forbade him to stand, and casting a cushion at his feet, commanded him to be seated. This he did for the purpose of showing him honour and of exalting him over all that were present. When the poet ended his recitation, Saba exclaimed: "Thou art unto us, O Abu 'Abd Allah, such as is described by al-Mutanabbi:

My heart is that of Kings, though—it be perceived that my tongue is that of a poet.*

قال عمارة لما قام ابن اقم بين يدي سبا ينشد هذه القصيدة الذي منها هذه
الابيات منعه من القيام ورمى له مخدة و امره بالقعود عليها اكراماً له و رفعاً
عن الحاضرين ثم لما فرغ من الانشاد قال له يابا عبد الله انت عندنا كما قال المتنبى .

و فوادى من الملوك و إن كا ن لسانى يرى من الشعراء

* See Dieterici's Mutanabbi, p. 633.

NOTE 39 to p. 45.—The omissions, that are here evident in the text, render it impossible to interpret the author's meaning with any degree of certainty. Those omissions I apprehend to be three in number, as shown by the lacunæ I have left in the translation. In the first, we may infer it to have been related that Khalf's plot was discovered and that he was imprisoned. In the second, that Saba made certain demands, which Jayyāsh, by the advice of his wazīr, met with counter offers; and in the third, that the Arabs refused the proffered terms and proceeded to attack Zabīd.*

I find no mention of these events in either al-Janadi or al-Khazraji; but the former has the following passage (p. 188 obv.), which is copied almost verbatim by Khazraji (p. 88).

Among the leading men of the Abyssinian dynasty was the Wazīr of King Jayyāsh, namely (Abu Sa'īd) Khalf son of Abu 't-Tāhir the Omayyad. He was one of the most remarkable men of the day for his distinguished capacity and merits. He attached himself to Jayyāsh when the Ziyadite Kingdom came to an end, and he accompanied him to India. Jayyāsh promised the wazīr, that in the event of their success in the recovery of his kingdom, Khalf should share with him the royal dignity and authority. But when Jayyāsh won the throne, he simply appointed Khalf Wazīr and gave him the title of Ḳasīm al-Mulk, Participator in the royal authority. Khalf's reward was confined to the receipt of that barren title, although but for his assistance, Jayyāsh had never succeeded in his enterprise. Ere long hostility arose between them. The wazīr fled and Jayyāsh wrote him in conciliatory terms, inquiring after his welfare. Khalf replied in the following lines:—

If there be a country where I am not held in honour—though it call unto me, I will not answer.
Even though its loveliness be that of the gardens of Paradise—and so also its sweetness. Yet an abject life therein would make its fragrance hateful.
I would fly to where I may be held in honour—even though it be a land whose barren plains resound with the howls of famished wolves.

* The statement that the Arabs, after their defeat on that occasion, did not again invade Tihāmah is in contradiction, it will be observed, with what we read elsewhere. Supra, pp. 96 and 97.

NOTE 40 to p. 47.—Kur'an S. xxxiii. v. 36. It is explained in the Kashshāf that this verse was revealed for the purpose of reproving Zaynab daughter of Jahsh and cousin of the Prophet. The latter had arranged a marriage between her and his freedman Zayd and had provided the dowry. The marriage took place, but the lady and her brother made no disguise of their profound dissatisfaction with her being the wife, as they complained, of a slave. She aspired, it was said, to being taken in marriage by the Prophet himself. Her wishes were eventually gratified, but for the particulars of that ancient piece of scandal, I may confine myself to referring the reader to Sir William Muir's Life of Muhammad.

NOTE 41 to p. 47.—Kur'an xxvii. 29, 30 and 32. These words are those of Bilkīs Queen of Sheba (Saba), on receiving a letter from Solomon, commanding her and her people to recognise his authority. Bilkīs sought the advice of her counsellors, an example which Queen Sayyidah declares she will not follow. The King had heard of Bilkīs and of her splendour from the hoopoe, who said to Solomon that he came unto him from (the country of) Saba with truthful tidings, words which Queen Sayyidah, as will be observed, turns to account in the subsequent sentence. The words Resist me not, etc., are omitted by 'Omārah, but are inserted by Khazraji, as in the text of the Qur'ān. The abrupt change from the singular to the plural arises from strict adherence to the sacred text. The expression Ye have wrested the words from their true sense is likewise borrowed from the Qur'ān, which in several passages applies it to the Jews.

NOTE 42 to p. 48.—Al-Khazraji proceeds as follows (p. 54):—

He (Saba son of Aḥmad the Sulayhite) continued to inhabit his castle of Ashyah until he died in the year 492. At his death, Ṣan'ā and the surrounding country were dis severed from the Sulayhite Kingdom. The Queen continued to inhabit Dhu Jiblah, until her death in the year that will be mentioned hereafter (A.H. 532). Ṣan'ā was conquered by Sulṭān Ḥātim ibn al-Ghashīm, whose history will be found in this book.

The same date for the death of Saba, A.H. 492, is given by al-Janadi; but Ibn Khaldūn writes 486 (supra, p. 151). Al-Janadi adds the correct orthography of the name Ashyah. In the British Museum MS. of 'Omārah it is written Ashyakh, which I have rectified in the printed text.

NOTE 43 to p. 49.—Al-Afdal Shahinsbah was wazīr, and virtually absolute ruler of the Fatimite Empire, under the Khalifahs al-Musta'la and al-Āmir. He was assassinated by order of the latter in A.H. 515.

NOTE 44 to p. 50. The words enclosed within square brackets are absolutely necessary to complete the sense, and we are able to restore them, with little short of certainty, from the corresponding passages of other writers. But another and larger omission may still be suspected, certain particulars on the rise of the family of al-Walīd, supplied at this point both by al-Janadi and by al-Khazraji. The latter writes (p. 54) as follows:—

At-Ta'kar belonged to 'Abd Allah ibn Muḥammad the Sulayhite, brother of 'Aly ibn Muḥammad ibn aṣ-Ṣulayḥi. Al-Mukarram, upon the death of his father and of his uncle 'Abd Allah, appointed his cousin, As'ad son of 'Abd Allah, Governor of the city. As'ad's conduct became bad, and al-Mukarram removed him and placed him in command of Raymah. He appointed Abu 'l-Barakāt son of al-Walīd over at-Ta'kar and its dependencies, and Abu 'l-Barakāt's brother Abu 'l-Futūh son of al-Walīd over the fortress of Ta'izz. Al-Mufaddal, then in his early youth, was in the service of al-Mukarram at Dhu Jiblah and was admitted into the presence of the Princess.

Upon the death of Abu 'l-Barakāt, which occurred after that of al-Mukarram, the Queen confided the Governorship of at-Ta'kar to his son Khālid. The latter remained in command for a period of about two years, at the end of which he was slain by the Jurist 'Abd Allah ibn al-Maṣū'. This Ibn al-Maṣū' was a learned Jurist and a man of an earnestly religious disposition. He professed attachment to the Amīr Khālid ibn Abi 'l-Barakāt, who was ruler over his country Dhu 's-Sufāl.* (Though a Sunni) he ran no danger of being molested and Khālid trusted him. He had issued orders that the Jurist should not be hindered from coming up to him at whatsoever time he listed. This man's soul nevertheless instigated him to slay the Governor, the shedding of whose blood he regarded as lawful, seeing that Khālid was a member of the Ismailite sect. He consulted no person, but persuaded himself that the officials, on finding him prepared with money for the payment of salaries, would submit to him and do his bidding. He engaged the services of an oil-dealer, whose wont it was to go up to the castle with oil, for sale to the people who dwelt in the fortress. He filled his leathern oil-vessel with gold and silver coin and the two went up together. On finding himself alone with the Amīr Khālid, he slew him. In his excitement he cried aloud. The people of the castle hastened unto him, and finding the Amīr dead, they killed the Jurist.

Al-Janadi (Paris MS. fol. 194 rev.) proceeds in the corresponding passage of his history as follows:—

The Queen appointed al-Mufaddal to replace (his brother Khālid). From the day of his arrival at at-Ta'kar he pursued the Jurists with his enmity. He openly manifested the hatred he bore them and he seized the lands both of the assassin and of his family, their ancient possessions situated in Dhu 's-Sufāl. Most of the Jurists fled from the neighbourhood of at-Ta'kar in dread of his severities. I have mentioned what he did to the people of the Jurist Zayd, when relating the latter's history.

Al-Mufaddal became the Queen's trusted adviser and administrator of her kingdom. The Queen decided upon nothing without his advice. He attained great power, and his word was raised on high. There was not only none among the nobles of the land who could pretend to surpass him, but none that could equal him. He made incursions into Tihāmah on several occasions, with results at times favourable and at others against him. He was a man distinguished by generous and noble qualities. But in supreme nobility and generosity of character, he ranked below Saba (son of Aḥmad) hereinbefore mentioned. Al-Mufaḍḍal was liberal and the object of praise. Poets came to him from all parts and eulogized him, and he rewarded them with surpassing rewards. His Court was visited by Mawāhib ibn Jadīd al-Maghrabi, who panegyricized him in several odes, one of which contains the following lines :—

O thou that ownest the Faith and the World and their people,
That clingest with firm grasp to the saving tenets of Islām,
Men say, he that would riches must dwell by the sea or with a King.

And thus have I done, son of Walid, for thou art a Sea and thou art a King.”*

Among the still existing memorials of al-Mufaḍḍal's rule, is the watercourse he constructed, extending from Hīnwah (?) to the city of Janad.† It passes over places where its channel has been excavated in the living rock, in such wise that a description of the work is hard to be believed. Many such channels were made, and a stream of water is led through them. On reaching a spot between two mountains, the craftsmen provided for its passage by means of a wall, about two hundred cubits of the new measure in length from one mountain to the other, its height from the ground about fifty cubits and its width about ten cubits. These are the dimensions according to my own measurements and estimates. A person contemplating that great work, feels convinced that it can have been executed only by the Jinn, and but for absolute certainty of its visible existence, it were impossible to believe in it.

Another great work of al-Mufaḍḍal was the reconstruction of

* See Note 74.

† Al-Ahdal (fol. 280 rev.), when mentioning the foundation of the city of Manṣūrah by Sayf al-Islām Tuḡhtakīn in A.H. 592, states that it was built at the distance of a quarter of a day's march south of Janad. He adds that the Sulṭān revived the prosperity of its valley, known by the name of Khanwah خنوة; which had become the abode of wild beasts, and that in the village of Hīnwah (?) حنوة, he built a hospital for the entertainment of strangers. The village in question must have stood near the Castle of Dumlūwah.

the mosque of Janad. The portions he built are the front and the two aisles. The rear was built by a Kādi, one of the Jurists attached to the mosque. The portion erected by al-Mufaḍḍal may be distinguished through its being built of stone. He roofed it and it continued in existence until Mahdy son of 'Aly ibn Mahdy captured the city. He demolished the mosque and burnt it with fire, as will be related hereafter, if it please God. It remained a ruin until the Ghuzz (the Turkish and Northern soldiery under the Ayyūbites) arrived in Yaman. The power of the family of Mahdy did not long endure after the destruction of the mosque, nor had it been long in existence before. When Sayf al-Islām reached the city, he restored the mosque and added to its height the existing portion, built of brick. This will be mentioned hereafter, when the history of the Ayyūbite conquest is related.

The Kādi Abu Bakr al-Yāf'y mentions the story of the water-channels, in the verses he composed in praise of Maṣūr son of al-Mufaḍḍal, wherein he eulogized the father as well as the son, extolling al-Mufaḍḍal as the constructor of that great work. I doubted to whom it was to be rightly attributed, until I found the passage in question in the Kādi's poem. I have already, when giving an account of al-Yāf'y's life, said enough to render it unnecessary to recur to the subject here, but I desire to add the lines in which he refers to the artificial watercourse, and to its author al-Mufaḍḍal, as follows:—

the waters along their rocky bed,
He cleft the lofty mountains and their streams became—as heaven's rains, flowing over a level plain.

The words He cleft the lofty mountains are sure evidence to the truth of what we have said.

Al-Janadi's doubts as to the authorship of the rock-cut water-channels and aqueduct, suggest the question whether the work were not of far more ancient date than he supposes, and whether al-Mufaḍḍal's share in it may not have been confined to its restoration. It would be interesting to learn from modern travellers the present condition of a monument, of which important remains or traces can hardly fail to be still in existence.

NOTE 45 to p. 52.—Khazraji has قيطان and Yākūt Kayzan قيطان, in the neighbourhood, he says, of Dhu Jiblah. The tribe of Janb, also called Munabbih (Hamdāni, p. 115), and those of Sinhān, 'Ans and Zubayd were sub-tribes of the Banu Madhhij.

NOTE 46 to p. 53.—Al-Janadi (p. 185 obv.) says that this man was son of al-Mufaḍḍal's uncle, and such, he adds, is the statement of Ibn Sāmurrah, whilst 'Omārah, he continues, attributes the capture of the fortress to certain men among whom was a cousin of his own. Al-Janadi himself is of opinion that both versions may be adopted, to the effect, that is to say, that the insurgents were aided by the co-operation of a person who was kinsman of al-Mufaḍḍal, and by that of 'Omārah's cousin. He mentions also that al-Mufaḍḍal was buried at 'Azzān at-Ta'kar (the slopes of Ta'kar?)

NOTE 47 to p. 54.—Hamdāni speaks of the Banu Baḥr as derived from Rabī'ah (p. 114, l. 20), a name borne by, amongst others, a sub-tribe of Khanlān (Rabī'ah son of Sa'd al-Akbar son of Khaulān (ib. l. 13). Rabī'ah was also the name of a sub-tribe of the Banu Janb (Hamdāni, p. 93, l. 9, 13). Baḥr was, moreover, according to Hamdāni, a subdivision of the Ṣadif, a sub-tribe of the Banu Kindah, inhabitants of Ḥaḍramaut and descendants of Murrah and of 'Arib. And, at p. 112, l. 23, he mentions a tribe or family of the name of Buḥr, descendants of Ḥimyar.

The Banu Dinnah he mentions as a sub-tribe of the Banu 'Udhrah, derived from Kudā'ah, and elsewhere as descendants of the Banu Numayr, an Ishmaelite tribe (p. 116, l. 17, and p. 165, l. 1).

The Banu Marraḥ are described as a subdivision of Hamdān (p. 107, l. 9), but also (p. 113, l. 15) as Ḥimyarites. The Banu Zarr, we are told, belonged to the tribe of Jabar (descendants of Yāfi') and consequently Ḥimyarites likewise, but in speaking of a member of the family (supra, p. 57) it is said that he was a Khaulanite.

The Banu Rāzih and Banu Jumā'ah are stated by Hamdāni to have been Khaulanites (p. 73, l. 18, and p. 114, l. 18, 20).

The tribes of Sha'b and Sha'b-Ḥay, he tells us, dwelt in the Sarāt of Khaulān (p. 69, l. 24), and the Banu Ḥay he describes as Khaulanites (p. 114, l. 26).

NOTE 48 to p. 55.—The Queen, says al-Janadi (fol. 185 obv.) appointed in the place of al-Mufaḍḍal the son of his uncle, As'ad son of Abu 'l-Futūh, as administrator and guardian of her kingdom. He was the son of Abu 'l-Futūh, son of al-'Alā son of al-Walīd. He resided at the fortresses of Ṣabir and Ta'izz, over which his father had ruled before him. He continued to exercise the authority formerly held by al-Mufaḍḍal, until the year 514, when he was assassinated at Ta'izz by two of his retainers.* This event, continues al-Janadi, occurred after the arrival of Ibn Najīb ad-Daulah.

NOTE 49 to p. 56.—Al-Khazraji, speaking elsewhere of the Banu Jaub (fol. 105), says that when about to march, it was their custom to shout the words mentioned in the text.

NOTE 50 to p. 57.—The Hujariyah were a body of men in the service of the Fatimite Khalifahs. They were so named because they occupied barracks, known by the name of al-Hujar, the Chambers, situated between the great palace at Cairo and Bāb an-Naṣr. They were originally a body of skilled craftsmen, first selected by the Khalifah al-Mu'izz, but they were subsequently made use of in a military capacity. Being led by al-Afdal Shahinshah against the Franks at Ascalon, they deserted their leader, who was compelled to retreat, after setting fire to his stores. The body was re-organized by al-Afdal. He fixed their numbers at 3000 men and placed them under the command of an Amīr who received the title of al-Muwaffaq. Previous to that time, the Hujariyahs consisted, partly if not wholly, of native Egyptians. They were selected with the greatest care by the provincial governors, from among the most promising youths or children to be found in each district, special regard being paid to both physical and intellectual capacity. The native element was eliminated by al-Afdal, who replaced it by a selection of youths from among the families of the foreign soldiery. (Maḳrīzi's Khiṭaṭ, vol. i. p. 443.) Maḳrīzi's words, I may add, are that the new levies were selected from among the children of the Ajnad, a word which properly signifies simply soldiers. The singular is Jundy, which in Egypt is vulgarly pronounced Gindy, and is used to denote a Turkish soldier, and also generally a Turk of the poorer class.

* Khazraji mentions the same date, 514; but As'ad, according to 'Omārah, must have lived to a later period. See pp. 60 and 97.

So far as I am aware, al-Afdal's experiment is the only serious attempt ever made to utilize the native population of Egypt in a military capacity, from the time of the Arab conquest down to the days of Muḥammad 'Aly, in the early part of the present century. The fact is all the more curious, considering the incessant struggles there have been for the acquisition of military power. The supremacy of any one of the ever contending factions has invariably depended upon the numbers and bravery of its followers. Muḥammad 'Aly was the first to depart from ancient tradition, and to form an army composed of native levies, but to the end of his life he retained also in his service foreign troops, a policy finally abandoned by his successors some five and twenty years ago. Negro troops have at various times played an important part in the military history of Egypt, and they were especially numerous under the Tulūnites and under the Fatimite Khalīfah al-Mustanṣir, whose mother was indeed a negress.

NOTE 51 to p. 57.—The Ismailite Dā'ys taught their neophytes that mystical and spiritual significations attached, not only to passages and single words of the Qur'ān, but also to numberless particulars observable in the natural world, and especially in the structure of the human body. It would appear from the text, either that they extended similar occult meanings to accidental marks and blemishes, or that Ibn Najib ad-Daulah did so, on the occasion in question, on his own authority, for the purpose of impressing upon the people a belief in his supernatural knowledge. See Maḳrīzi's Khiṭaṭ, vol. i. p. 392, and de Sacy's Exposé de la religion des Druzes.

NOTE 52 to p. 58.—Maytam was, according to Hamdāni, the name of a mountain and of a mikhhlāf or district. The river was probably one of the affluents of the Wādi Raghādah. If I rightly understand Hamdāni's explanations (pp. 75, l. 22; 92, 16; 101, 19, 21), Maytam was south or south-east of Dhamār and probably at no great distance from Jabal Khubbān.

The Bann Himās, spoken of a few lines farther on, are mentioned by Ibn Kūṭaybah as a sub-tribe of Madhhiġ. (Eichhorn, p. 143.)

NOTE 53 to p. 60.—The allusion is to a verse in the Qur'ān: Say, flight will not serve you, if ye flee from death or from slaughter (S. xxxiii. v. 16).

NOTE 54 to p. 61.—There can be little doubt that a transcriber's omission occurs here, and indeed if the word hadha, this, be not an interpolation, the fact of such an omission may be regarded as absolutely certain. The words I have placed in the translation within square brackets may, I think, be supplied with little or no hesitation, for the purpose of conveying the sense that the story that follows was derived from Abu 'Abd Allah al-Husayn, the same who has figured before as one of 'Omārah's authorities. The subsequent sentence, which I translate "they whom I smite with my hand," etc., has without doubt been incorrectly transcribed.

NOTE 55 to p. 62.—Al-Ma'mūn al-Baṭā'iḥy was arrested by the Khalīfah al-Amir on the fourth of Ramaḍān 519, and was put to death in 522. Al-Maḳrīzi says (Khitāt, vol. i. p. 463), that al-Ma'mūn was accused of having sent (Ibn) Najīb ad-Daulah Abu 'l-Ḥasan to Yaman, with orders to strike coins bearing the name of the Imām al-Mukhtār Muḥammad son of Nizār.

Nizār was son of the Khalīfah al-Mustanṣir. Upon the latter's death in A.H. 487, Aḥmad, a younger brother, was raised to the throne by the Wazīr al-Afdāl Shahinshah, under the title of al-Musta'la billah. Nizār fled to Alexandria, where he caused himself to be proclaimed Khalīfah and assumed the title of al-Muṣṭafa li-dīn Allah. He was soon compelled to surrender himself to al-Afdāl, by whom he was conveyed to Cairo and put to death. The Eastern Ismailites embraced the cause of Nizār, who, as they probably with truth asserted, had been appointed by his father heir to the Empire. They renounced the supremacy of al-Musta'la and of his successors, whom they denounced as usurpers. Hence they are commonly known in Eastern history by the designation Nizārites. They were also styled by their enemies al-Mulāhidah, the Impious, and in the popular traditions still current in Egypt, they are remembered under the name of al-Fidawīyah, because in the perilous adventures they were in the habit of undertaking, they devoted their lives as a ransom (fiḍa) for the liberation and propagation of their Faith. By western historians they are best known under the designation of the Assassins. Their Chiefs, now represented by an Imām who resides at Bombay, claim to be descendants of Nizār.

As a curiosity of history, I may add that not many years since certain claims advanced by Indian Dodekite Shiāhs, which practically involved the right of existence of the Bombay Ismailites as a separate body, had to be investigated by an English Court of Justice. Sir Joseph Arnould, before whom the case was tried, delivered an elaborate judgment, in which he reviewed the history of the Alides from the days of the Prophet down to the present time, arriving at the conclusion, that a small and obscure sect at Bombay was able to prove its right to be recognised as representatives of the erewhile formidable Karmathians, of the no less dreaded Assassins, and of the once powerful Empire of the Fatimites.

NOTE 56 to p. 64.—According to Ibn Khaldūn (supra, p. 169), Ibn Najīb ad-Daulah was drowned at sea, a statement which is probably correct, but for which no authority is given. Al-Khazraji's account of the end of Ibn Najīb ad-Daulah's career is copied from 'Omārah, and corresponds in every particular with that supplied by our author, saving only certain verbal distinctions, most of which are shown in the notes I have appended to the printed text. Al-Janadi makes the following remarks (fol. 185 rev.), which clearly prove that if we have not the words of 'Omārah in their original purity, their corruption is of ancient date:—

The Queen then delivered up Ibn Najīb ad-Daulah, but she sent along with him one of her secretaries. On reaching Aden, the envoy departed with Ibn Najīb ad-Daulah, and the secretary's journey was delayed for some days. Then he was sent off in a ship, the captain of which received orders to drown him, which he did, at Bāb al-Mandab. I am in ignorance of the fate of Ibn Najīb ad-Daulah, seeing that 'Omārah does not mention it. The Queen repented of having surrendered Ibn Najīb ad-Daulah, and of having sent away her secretary, whose presence with her she esteemed of happy augury.

Al-Janadi's account of the Sulayhite dynasty ends at fol. 185 rev. with the following passage, which al-Khazraji incorporates almost verbatim in his history (p. 58-9).

Upon the death of the Queen, at the date I have mentioned when relating the end of her career,* Manṣūr son of al-Mufaḍḍal succeeded, by her bequest, to the kingdom of the Sulayhites. He sold Ta'kar and Ḥabb and the fortresses (I read حصنة for حصنى المخلاف) of the Miklīlāf (Ja'far) and dependencies to the Dā'y Muḥammad ibn Saba ibn Abi Su'ūd. This was in the year 547, fifteen years after the Queen's death. The sovereignty of the Sulayhite dynasty, reckoning it from the year 429, endured therefore 119 years. . .

Manṣūr continued to inhabit the fortress of Ta'izz until he died. He was the first to adopt Tha'bat † as a place of recreation. He was wont to go down and spend there several days. His death occurred in the year 540 and odd. He left a son Aḥmad, who succeeded him, and who followed the same course of life as his father until the year 558. Mahdy son of 'Aly ibn Mahdy then came up from Tihāmah and purchased of him Ṣabir and Ta'izz. Aḥmad then inhabited Janad until the year 563, when he died.

NOTE 57 to p. 65.—An obvious omission here occurs in our text, which is indeed, in this chapter, more than usually mutilated. The general import of the missing passage is not difficult to conjecture, but its sense and doubtless almost its precise words are supplied by Khazraji. I have not hesitated therefore to incorporate the passage in my translation.

This and other amendments are distinguished by being enclosed within square brackets.

* At fol. 184 rev., al-Janadi says that the Queen died at Dhu Jiblah in A.H. 532. So also in Khazraji. The latter adds that she had attained the age of eighty-eight years, and Dayba' says that she was buried in the mosque she had built at Dhu Jiblah, in the foremost part of the building and on its western side. Her reign, he continues, extended over a period of thirty-one years.

† Niebuhr marks upon his map Thöbad close to Ta'izz, presumably the place here mentioned. On Manzoni's map the name is written Thabud.

The following is Khazraji's version of the early history of the Zurayite dynasty (Leiden MS. pp. 58 and 59), which the reader will be able to compare with the corresponding passages in 'Omārah. The only actual addition to the information given by the latter, is Khazraji's statement that Zuray' gained possession of Dumlūwah in A.H. 480.

قال علي بن الحسن الخزرجي وفقه الله للعمل بما يرضيه كان السبب في تملك آل زريع عدن و ما ناهجها من البلاد ان الداعي علي بن محمد الصليحي لما استولى على اليمن و افتتح مدينة عدن فكان فيها يومئذ بنو معن قد تغلبوا عليها و على الحُج و ابين و الشحر و حضرموت ابقاها تحت ايديهم و جعلهم نوابها من قبله فلما تزوج المكرم بالحرّة السيدة جعل الصليحي صداقها عدن و ما ناهجها فكان بنو معن يرفعون خراجها الى السيدة في ايام الصليحي فلما قتل الداعي علي بن محمد الصليحي في التارنج المذكور اولا تغلب بنو معن علي ما تحت ايديهم من البلاد فقصدهم المكرم الى عدن و اخرجهم منها و ولاها العباس و مسعودا ابني المكرم الهمداني و كانت لهما سابقة محمودة و بلا حسن في قيام الدولة المستنصرية مع الداعي علي بن محمد الصليحي ثم مع ولده المكرم يرم نزوله الى زبيد و اخذ امه اسماء بنت شهاب من اسرا الاحول سعيد بن نجاح فجعل للعباس حصن التعكر بعدن و باب البرّ و ما يدخل منه و جعل لمسعود حصن الخضرآ و باب البحر و ما يدخل منه و اليه امر المدينة و استخلفهما للحرّة السيدة فلم يزل ارتفاع عدن يحمل الى السيدة في كل سنة مائة الف دينار وقد يزيد وقد ينقص الى ان توفي العباس بن المكرم فخلفه ابنه زريع بن العباس علي التعكر و باب البرّ و بقي مسعود علي ما تحت يده و كل واحد منهما يحمل ما عليه و ملك زريع الدملوة يوم الثلاثاء لست عشرة ليلة خلت من رمضان سنة ثمانين و اربعمائة فلما بعثت السيدة المفضل بن ابي البركات الى زبيد كتبت الى زريع بن العباس و الي عمه مسعود بن المكرم ان يلتقياه الى زبيد فلقياه و قاتلا معه فقتلا معاً علي باب زبيد فانثقل امر عدن الى ولديهما ابي السعود بن زريع

It will be observed that the name borne by the ancestor of the Hamdanite Princes of Aden, stands in our text as الكرم. In the Leiden MS. of Khazraji and in the Paris MS. of Janadi the name is for the most part written المكرم. But not invariably so. Thus in Janadi, at p. 186 rev. (see infra, Note 69), it is distinctly written الكرم and so also in the corresponding passage in Khazraji, p. 77.

The surname of 'Aly son of Saba is in our text and in Khazraji generally written الأغر. But in some instances the diacritical point is absent. In others it is not quite clear to which letter the point is intended to apply. In Janadi the name is distinctly written الأعز al-A'azz. So also in al-Ahdal. In the British Museum text of Ibn Khaldūn the two names are invariably written الكرم and الأعز.

* Written here and elsewhere الغارات

NOTE 58 to p. 65.—The author of the Tāj al-‘Arūs says that Ta‘kar is one of the mountains of Aden, on the left-hand side of a person proceeding from the gate to the mainland. ‘Omārah, as will be seen (p. 73), speaks of it as within the city, but we may perhaps understand him to mean within the peninsula. It may perhaps be identified with the spot I find marked on Colonel F. M. Hunter’s plan of Aden, under the name of Orrus al Hosn, near the “Main Pass Gate.” Colonel Hunter mentions the fort of Ta‘kar (Statistical Account, p. 184) and also the Castle (Hiṣn) al-Akhḍar (pp. 190 and 191), but without giving an indication of their position. The latter, I presume, must have stood at no great distance from the Island of Seerah.

NOTE 59 to p. 67.—The name of Muḥammad son of Saba is followed in the text by the words, “and he was the last of the Bann Zuray’.” They are clearly erroneous, and I omit them in the translation. Al-Janadi confines himself to saying that ‘Aly ibn Abi ‘l-Gharāt was the last of the family of Mas‘ūd.

The subsequent sentence, in which the conquest of Yaman by Turān Shah is mentioned, is evidently an interpolation. ‘Omārah tells us (p. 79) that he wrote his history in 564, and he was executed at Cairo on the 2nd Ramaḍān 569, more than two months before the capture of Aden by the Ayyubites, on the 20th Dhu ‘l-Ḳa‘dah according to Ibn Hātim.

NOTE 60 to p. 68.—Al-Janadi adds that ‘Aly ibn Abi ‘l-Gharāt possessed in Lahj the city of Za‘āzi. له في لحي مدينة الزعازع. In enumerating the possessions of Saba ibn Abi ‘s-Su‘ūd, al-Janadi, like Khazraji, omits the name الرما. He writes as follows:—و له معقل الدملوة و سامع و مطران و نمير و دبجان . و بعض المعافر و بعض الجند

The name of the place that follows after مطران looks in Khazraji (p. 69; see Note 57), and also at p. 108 (see foot-note 5 to p. 98 of the printed text of ‘Omārah), like نمر or نمير. But both Janadi, as quoted above, and Ibn Hātim (see Note 101) have نمير which it may be presumed stands for Numayr. For the mountain of Sāmi‘, see Hamdani, p. 74, 14; 76, 6; 77, 1; and 78, 6. Instead of Za‘āzi‘ the name in Müller's edition of Hamdāni and also in Sprenger's Reise-routen is written Ra'āri'.

NOTE 61 to p. 69.—The name of this village is written in the text without the diacritical points. But al-Janadi mentions it when speaking of the learned men of Lahj (fol. 69 rev.). There, as well as at fol. 186 obv., he calls it Bani Abbah al-'Ulyā. He supplies the vocalization of the word, and tells us that it was vulgarly pronounced Manyabbah. See also Hamdani, p. 98, 1.

NOTE 62 to p. 69.—The line quoted in the text is from the Mu'allakah of Tarafah ibn al-'Abd, al-Bakri.

وَ ظَلَمْتُ ذُو الْقُرْبَى أَشَدَّ مَضَاظَةً عَلَى الْمَرْءِ مِنْ وَقَعِ لِحْسَامِ الْمَهْدِ

NOTE 63 to p. 70.—The family of Zuray', as has been seen, were members of the Banu Jushan, a sub-tribe of the Banu Yām, themselves a subdivision of the great Sept of Hamdān.

NOTE 64 to p. 70.—See Dieterici's Mutanabbi, p. 402. The entire verse, of which, for obvious reasons, only the second hemistich was quoted, and which, as will be noticed, is inaccurately rendered, is as follows:—

أَعْلَى الْمَمَالِكِ مَا يُبْنَى عَلَى الْأَسْلِ وَالطَّعْنُ عِنْدَ مُحِبِّهِمْ كَالْقُبْلِ

The noblest of Empires are built up with the sword—and to those that love (desire to win) them, lance-thrusts are as kisses.

The affixed pronoun, rendered by them, is in the feminine, the word mamālik, kingdoms, to which it refers, being a feminine plural.

NOTE 65 to p. 73.—Aṣ-Ṣuhayb, according to Hamdāni

(p. 54, 24), was inhabited by a people descended from Saba, and they were known by the designation of Saba-Şuhayb. Elsewhere (p. 189) he mentions Şuhayb as on the pilgrim route from Aden, next after Lahj. Manzoni marks Jabal "Menif" on his map, about twelve miles north of Lahj, as also a stream of the same name flowing thence into the Wadi "Saib." Yāḳūt mentions Munīf as the name of a fortress situated on Mount Şabir, which, it seems to me, requires confirmation.

The following are the corresponding passages in al-Janadi (fol. 186 obv.). The words of al-Khazraji (p. 70), who indeed cites al-Janadi as his authority, are substantially the same :

"War continued to rage between the two parties and many battles were fought between them, ending eventually in the victory of Saba over his kinsman. 'Aly son of Abu 'l-Gharāt fled to Saba-Şuhayb, where he and his friends entrenched themselves in two fortresses, Munīf and al-Jabalah (?). A wonderful thing was, that on the day upon which 'Aly was defeated, Bilāl the freedman of Saba captured the fortress of al-Khaḍrā. He sent a messenger with the glad tidings. . . .

"Bilāl brought down the Honourable Lady Bahjah (from al-Khaḍrā) into the city (of Aden), where she continued to reside until her death. I believe that the mosque known under the name of Masjid al-Hurrah (the Lady's Mosque), situated near the principal mosque of Aden, is named after her.

"On the termination of the war, the Dā'y Saba entered Aden, where he abode for seven months and then died.* He was buried at the foot of at-Ta'kar, in the year 533. After the year 700, signs of excavation in a mound at the foot of at-Ta'kar became visible through the action of the rains. It was surmised that treasure was concealed on the spot, and information was carried to the Governor of the city. He went up and stood by whilst the workmen uncovered a large chest, closely fastened with nails. It was opened and found to contain the body of a man, wound in sheets, but upon being touched the body crumbled into dust. The chest and remains were restored to their original place, as was also the earth that had been dug out. It may be that this was the body of the Dā'y, but God is all-knowing.†

* Khazraji (p. 70) quotes Janadi to the effect that Saba died in 533, the same year as stated in 'Omārah; but the event occurred, he adds, in 532, "the year in which Queen Sayyidah also died."

† The practice of burying the dead enclosed in coffins is, so far as I am aware, altogether unknown in Muhammadan countries at the present day. But it would seem to have been otherwise in former times. Khazraji (fol. 73) tells a story not unlike the above, to the effect that a coffin made of ebony was found, in the days of Sulṭān al-Manṣūr 'Omar ibn Rasūl (A.H. 626—647), in a graveyard at Manṣūrah, that upon its being opened it was found to contain remains, believed to be those of the Dā'y Muḥammad son of Saba (who died at Dumlūwah). See also Ibn al-Athīr, vol. xii. p. 269, where it is related that on the grave of Ḳatādah Amīr and Sharif of Mecca being opened in A.H. 620, the coffin it contained was found to be empty.

“The Dā'y Saba died after having appointed his son 'Aly al-A'azz to succeed him. The latter did not long survive, and died of consumption.* He had four sons of tender age, whom he placed under the guardianship of an [Abyssinian] eunuch named Anīs [al-A'azzi], the same name, Anīs, as that of the man who slew the last Prince of the Banu Ziyād.”

* At Dumlūwah in A.H. 534, according to Khazraji. He goes on to say that 'Aly's sons were Jābir, 'Abbās and Manṣūr. The name of the fourth he did not remember. He adds, immediately after, that al-A'azz bequeathed the kingdom to his son Ḥātim.

NOTE 66 to p. 74.—A Muṣalla is an enclosed place in the open air, set aside for the performance of prayer. Under the Fatimites, the Khalīfah resorted to the Muṣalla in state, on the occasion of the two great festivals of the year. Maḳrīzi says that the Muṣalla of Cairo was enclosed by Jauhar outside the walls in A.H. 358, and he describes the ceremonies that took place on the occasion of the Khalīfah's visits. (Khiṭāṭ, vol. i. p. 451. See also de Sacy's Chrestomathie, note to the Life of al-Ḥākīm.)

NOTE 67 to p. 76.—The reason why Maṣṣūr divorced his wife is explained by Ibn Khaldūn (supra, p. 174), and has perhaps been accidentally omitted from our text by the transcribers.

NOTE 68 to p. 78.—'Omārah's verses in praise of the Dā'y Muḥammad ibn Saba probably contained, like those he afterwards wrote at Cairo, eulogistic allusions to the Ismailites and to their pretensions, sure to be regarded by the people of Zabid as doubly offensive, proceeding as they did, from the pen of one who professed to be an orthodox Sunni.

Al-Ahdal writes as follows :—

'Omārah is profuse in his praise of the Dā'y 'Imrān and speaks in exaggerated terms of his great qualities. This is to be explained by the kindness he received from the princes of the dynasty of Zuray' and by the love he bore them—nay, it is said, by his partiality to their religion, that is to say, to Shī'ism and Isma'ilism. Be this known unto you. لاحسانهم اليه وميله الى محبتهم بل قيل الى مذهبهم اى التشيع والتسمع عمل فاعلم ذلك .

The following is a passage in which 'Omārah speaks of 'Imrān in more legitimate terms :

They will not be contradicted, etc. (See next Note.)

NOTE 69 to p. 79.—Al-Janadi has the following passage

* Khi. انيس الاعزى وهو استاذ حبشى.

(fol. 186 rev.), from which it may be inferred that our text of 'Omārah is incomplete at this point. See also Khazraji, p. 77.

The following words of 'Omārah, when relating the history of 'Imrān, are singularly eloquent and appropriate:

"Truly a gift from God were the qualities of the Dā'y 'Imrān. How copious were the showers of his generosity, how abundant the springs of his beneficence? How greatly was he missed in the pathways of life by those who had daily beheld him! How few, in the estimation of Kings and Princes, the occasions on which they enjoyed his companionship.* They will not be contradicted who declare that generosity and beneficence were the nature of 'Imrān, its necessary result, nay, its fulfilment and seal. Were there no other evidence of God's favour unto him, it were proved by his having been rescued from the tyranny of Ibn Mahdy."

He died in the year 560. The learned scholar, Abu Bakr, carried his remains to Mecca and buried them in one of its cemeteries. The mercy of God† for the mightiest of Kings ardently desire to be buried at Mecca, and though striving, at the cost of heavy expenditure to compensate themselves for that of which they are deprived, their efforts are vain. We have here, therefore, another proof of the divine favour, of which 'Imrān was the object. Among the enduring memorials of him in existence at Aden, is the pulpit in the principal mosque. His name is inscribed upon it, and it is a monument comforting to the soul and beautiful to the eye.

'Imrān left three sons, Muḥammad, Abu 's-Su'ūd and Maṣṣūr, all in their early youth and under the care of the Chamberlain Abu Durr Jauhar al-Mu'aẓẓami, in the fortress of Dumlūwah. The administrator at Aden of the affairs of the kingdom was the Chief Yāsir son of Bilāl, hereinbefore mentioned. In that condition matters remained until the arrival of Sulṭān Shams ad-Daulah Turān Shah son of Ayyūb (in Dhu 'l-Ḳa'dah 569). He conquered Aden, and Yāsir fled to the fortress of Dumlūwah, where Jauhar was. I have already related what happened to him. The family of Zuray' lost their sovereignty over Aden and its dependencies, and naught remained to them but the fortress of Dumlūwah, in the hands of Abu Durr, until he sold it to Sayf al-Islām (read to Turān Shah—see Note 101), shortly after the year 570.

* I translate the foregoing sentence with much hesitation. It is omitted by Khazraji.

† I cannot attempt to translate the words that follow. The sentence has no doubt been corrupted and Khazraji omits it.

It now only remains for me to speak of the chief nobles of the Zuray'ite dynasty. The first was the auspicious chief Bilāl, already mentioned. He died in the year 546 or 547. It was he who was eulogised by the accomplished scholar al-'Abdy, as I have hereinbefore stated, when mentioning him. Sulṭān Muḥammad son of Saba appointed Mudāfi' to succeed his father, and then the brother of Mudāfi', Abu 'l-Faraj Yāsir son of Bilāl. Yāsir held his office under Sulṭān Muḥammad and under Muḥammad's son ('Imrān). He exercised great power and enjoyed a wide celebrity. He was greatly praised and liberally rewarded his eulogists, nor did he disappoint any one that came to his court. 'Omārah has given a brief account of Yāsir's life in his memoirs of the Poets (?) He built the mosque at Aden, known as the mosque of Ibn al-Baṣri, the name of one who made it his place of resort for prayer and holy living.

When Yāsir left Duṃlūwah he proceeded to Dhu 'Udaynah, in disguise, accompanied by his mamluk Miftāḥ who was surnamed as-Sudāsy. A person gave information against him, to the officials of the Government. He was arrested, and notice of his capture was sent to Shams ad-Daulah, who commanded him to be strangled. The order was carried into execution, and his slave (Miftāḥ) shared his fate. It is also said that Shams ad-Daulah ordered them to be bisected. Yāsir's death took place in the year 571, and he was the last of the Zuray'ite wazirs.

'Omārah says that the descendants of al-Karam, father of al-'Abbās and Mas'ūd, whom al-Mukarram appointed (over Aden), are known under the designation family of adh-Dhi'b, and that next to the Sulayhites, they were the most distinguished Arabs in Yaman.

I have mentioned, in speaking of Jauhar, how he parted with the castle of Duṃlūwah, and there now only remains to me to give an account of the Abyssinian kings (of Zabīd).

Janadi's statement that the children of 'Imrān were placed under the guardianship of Abu Durr Jauhar is confirmed by Khazraji, who reproduces the preceding passages almost verbatim, and the statement is indirectly confirmed by Ibn Hātim. See Note 101. The corresponding passage in our MS. of 'Omārah (supra, p. 80, footnote) is hopelessly mutilated, and the sense that can with difficulty be extracted is undoubtedly incorrect. There are, so far as I am aware, no means to attempt a textual restoration, and a restoration of the sense, as no doubt originally conveyed by our author, would require far more thorough amendments than those offered in the footnotes to the printed text.

NOTE 70 to p. 79.—So also in Janadi, A.H. 546 or 547, as in the preceding note. Khazraji says that Bilāl died in 545. From Omārah's own words, on the ensuing page, it would appear that Muḥammad ibn Saba, who he has told us died in 548, survived Bilāl at least two years. But al-Janadi, on the other hand, casts doubt over the precise year of Muḥammad ibn Saba's death, which he says occurred in A.H. 548, or in 549, or in 550. He adds that 'Imrān received, on his accession, the title of al-Mukarram.

NOTE 71 to p. 80.—The Buhār (pl. abhirah) is a weight variously described as 300 or 400 or 600 or 1000 ratl or pounds, also as the proper load of a camel. Our author, it will be seen (supra, p. 109), describes it as equal to three kantārs.

NOTE 72 to p. 85.—See Baron de Slane's ed. of 'Imru 'l-Ḳays, p. 23, Ahlwardt, p. 117.

وَأَنَّكَ لَمْ تَنْفَخْ عَلَيَّ كَفَاخٍ ضَعِيفٍ وَلَمْ يَغْلِبْكَ مِثْلُ مُغَلَّبٍ

The death of aṣ-Ṣulayḥi occurred, according to Janadi (fol. 183 rev.), on the 12th of the month of Dhu 'l-Ḳa'dah 473. Khazraji adds that three men were spared in the massacre that followed, Wā'il ibn 'Īsa Prince of Wuḥāzah, 'Aly ibn Ma'n Prince of Aden and Ibn al-Kurandi Prince of al-Ma'āfir.

NOTE 73 to p. 90.—The person here referred to is probably the Khalifah 'Omar ibn 'Abd al-Azīz. See supra, p. 9.

NOTE 74 to p. 90.—The word Bahr, the Sea, is in constant use among Arabs, as a figure of speech implying infinity, boundless, that is to say, in generosity, learning, etc. (see supra, Note 44, p. 259). Abu 't-Ṭāmi signifies Exalted.

NOTE 75 to p. 93.—Literally, who made himself neither sweet nor bitter. There is a favourite Arab proverb, by which men are warned not to make themselves too sweet or they will be swallowed, nor too bitter or they will be spat forth.

There seems again reason to suspect an omission in this portion of the MS. Al-Janadi and, following him, Khazraji, al-Ahdal and Dayba', enter into particulars touching Jayyāsh's literary acquirements. His poetical works, they say, on the authority of 'Omārah, filled a large volume. They quote a long epistle in rhymed prose, which he is said to have addressed to his son's tutor. They speak also in laudatory terms of his history of Zabīd. Khazraji adds that the book had become excessively rare and could with difficulty be found in any of the libraries of the country. Al-Janadi mentions that according to 'Omārah, Jayyāsh bore the title of al-'Ādil Abu 't-Ṭāmi. Among the verses composed by Jayyāsh, he quotes the following:—

If a man's lenity be a help unto his enemy—against himself, then is sternness, of a certainty preferable and more conducive to tranquillity.

In severity is strength. In thy clemency is weakness—if thou extend it to the ungrateful.

إذا كان حلم المرء عون عدوه عليه فان للجهل * ابقى † و اروح
و في الصفح ضعف و العقوبة قوة اذا كنت تعفو عن كفور ‡ و تصفح

'Omārah, continues al-Janadi, ranks the following line among the most remarkable of Jayyāsh's compositions.

* الجبر

† Khi, اولى

‡ Khi, قائل

A mound of the fairest sand, the graceful stem of the bān-tree.—
Over all, the beauteous moon. And its gift a night of watchfulness.

كشيب نقاً من فوقه خوفاً بانتي باعلاء بدرٌ بوله * ليل ساهر

'Omārah's praise seems at first sight somewhat puzzling, but he reckons upon his Eastern reader's quickness to apprehend that the poet is not simply describing a desert moon-lit scene, that he is on the contrary descanting upon the charms of his mistress, her rounded form, her figure flexible and graceful as the bān-tree, and her face resplendent with beauty as the full moon.

Khrazraji relates the circumstances that led to the death of Ibn Abi 'Akāmah. Jayyāsh sought the hand of a woman, of whose extreme beauty he had been informed. She was daughter of an Arab tribe, descended from Rabī'ah son of Nizār, inhabiting the valley of Mauza'.† There was a division of opinion among her people, on the question whether the demand should be complied with. The Kādi, who as a Taghlibite was akin to the tribe, advised them not to consent unless all were agreed. Jayyāsh, by a liberal expenditure of money, eventually gained his ends, and the woman, when she joined her husband, acquainted him with the part played by the Kādi in the matter.

The same writer gives three, instead of one line only, of the verses composed by Ḥusayn ibn al-Ḳumm, as follows:—

Thou hast dealt unrighteously, O Jayyāsh, in slaying al-Ḥasan—
Thou hast darkened, by his destruction, the glory of his age.

* فوقه ? Khi, نوله

† Hamdāni says that the country in the neighbourhood of Mauza', Mukha and Bābal-Mandab, which was occupied by the Banu Musīh (a tribe derived from the Banu Majid, themselves a subdivision of the Banu Ḥaydān), was inhabited also by the Banu Farasān, descendants of the Banu Taghlib. The Himyarite genealogists, he adds, claimed them as descendants of Himyar.

The Farasān Islands, he further says, were named after the tribe, who, he also tells us, were originally Christians and at one time possessed churches in the islands. The Banu Farasān are described as enterprising merchants, who conducted a large trade with Abyssinia and protected commerce. (Müller's Hamdāni, p. 53, l. 20 sqq. and p. 98, l. 22 sqq.)

He sought not the accumulation of riches.—Pure and free from evil,

His reward for raising thee to the throne of Yaman,—is his slaughter at thy hands and a dishonoured grave.

اخطأت يا جياش في قتل الحسن فقات والله به عين الزمن
و لم يكن منطويا على ذخر مبرأ من الفسوق و الدرر
كان جزاه حين ولاك اليمن قتلكه و دفنه بلا كفن

NOTE 76 to p. 94.—Jurayb is described by Hamdāni (pp. 69 and 113) as a place where an important market was held, largely frequented by the people of Tihāmah and by the Arab inhabitants of the country of the Banu Hamdān.

The Banu Jurayb are said to be descendants of Huzayl son of Sharaḥbīl, one of the contemporaries and successors (tābi') of the Prophet's Companions, mentioned in Ibn al-Athīr's Usd al-Ghābah. (Bul. ed. v. p. 60.) Khazraji writes al-Hārith instead of Jurayb. The town of Jurayb is described by Hamdāni (p. 113, l. 6) as situated in the district of Ḥajūr. The latter is marked in Dr. Glaser's map.

NOTE 77 to p. 98.—Al-Janadi, like 'Omārah, does not mention the date at which Manṣūr son of Fātik died, and Khazraji remarks that he had not been able to ascertain it. But 'Omārah's words may be held to imply that the death of Manṣūr followed immediately after the accession of Mann Allah as Wazīr.

NOTE 78 to p. 98.—It is difficult to extract a consistent meaning from this passage, and hardly less so from the version given by al-Khazraji, shown in a footnote to the printed text. His words must signify that the lady received the title of Hurrah (free, virtuous, honourable, etc.) because she had borne a child to Manṣūr, an explanation which in her case in particular—that of a native of the country—is hardly satisfactory. I have preferred to read بنت as in Khazraji, instead of بيت, but فتنة as in our text in the next line, instead of بنت, repeated in Khazraji. The passage, however, remains very doubtful.

The surname Abu 'l-Jaysh is best known through its having been borne by one of the Princes of the Egyptian dynasty of Ṭulūn, and may be translated the Possessor of the great Army. But the word Jaysh may also be translated agitation, turmoil, in which sense it is perhaps used in the text. I may add that the name Jayyāsh, derived from the same root, may be translated high-spirited, fiery.

NOTE 79 to p. 100.—Al-Khazraji adds that, according to statements made to him by several persons, Mann Allah was buried in a mosque at Zabīd, which stood on a spot called al-Hadd. In Khazraji's own day it bore the name Mosque of Ibn ar-Rudād, after one who, when the building threatened ruin, repaired it. In earlier times, he continues, the mosque was universally known under the name of Mosque of the son of Mann Allah.

NOTE 80 to p. 102.—Abu 'l-Ḥasan Ibn al-Labbān al-Faraḍī, an eminent Jurist and authority on the laws of inheritance, died at Baghdād in A.H. 402.

NOTE 81 to p. 102.—Abu 'Amru ibn al-'Alā, one of the seven principal readers, that is to say, recensionists of the Kuranic text, died in A.H. 153 or 157, aged eighty-six years. Of the other six, the earliest died about A.H. 118 and the latest about A.H. 181.

The differences between the several readings are of so slight a character that it would be misleading to speak of them as so many versions of the Ḳur'ān.

NOTE 82 to p. 105.—The copyist must be suspected of being again at fault in this passage. It is difficult to make sense of the words واسع الاعمال, as they stand in the text, and they are not to be found in the corresponding passage in Khazraji. He writes as follows (p. 89):—

فاقطعهم ذوال و هو واد شمالي رمع و رمع واد شمالي زبيد فلم يزل الغز
يشغلون خراج الوادي الخ .

Yāḳūt mentions a village named Wasū' in the district of 'Aththar, a place which, if it is correctly described, is far too distant to be here in question.

NOTE 83 to p. 107.—It is hardly necessary to remind the reader that, in Muḥammadan countries, a slave who bears a child to her master, thereby becomes free.

NOTE 84 to p. 109.—Al-Khazraji supplies us at this point with a short passage, omitted by the transcriber of our text, but which I include in the translation. The words are as follows:—

ثم انتقلنا الى مجلس الشراب و كنا سبعة انا ثامنهم و كنت الساقى فاسكرت لخمسة الذين حضروا فلما سكروا انصرفوا فقلت لعثمان الخ .

NOTE 85 to p. 110.—My translation here again follows al-Khazraji:—

فلما اصبح الصباح عدت الى عثمان فاعدت اليه الالف دينار الذي كان دفعه
الى و سالته في ضيعة من ذوال .

Khazraji proceeds with the words فوقع لي بها. Reading the verb in the passive, the general sense agrees with 'Omārah.

NOTE 86 to p. 111.—Some words, omitted in the text, I have supplied in the translation, from al-Khazraji's version, as follows:—

فهرب الوصيف و تعلق ببعض غلمان الوزير مفلح فكتب ابو المعالى بسبب
غلامه بيتين و هما .

NOTE 87 to p. 113.—It will be observed that further on, 'Omārah gives this place the alternative name of الكرش. Al-Hamdāni has the same, but for a totally different place, namely between Mount Ṣabir and Aden (p. 77, 6-9). Khazraji vocalizes the name al-Karish. Yāqūt writes al-Kirsh and says it is a castle in the district of al-Mahjam, but his information, such as it is, is probably nothing more than what he has gathered from 'Omārah. Al-Janadi writes: (fol. 187 rev.), intimating in plain words, that the castle stood upon Mount Bura'.

The name of the castle of Dabsān, mentioned in our text a few lines further on, is thus likewise given by Khazraji, but I have nowhere else met with it.

NOTE 88 to p. 113.—Ibn Khaldūn says (supra, p. 166-7) that Ghānim ibn Yaḥya was a descendant of the Suleymānite Sharīfs of Mecca, who, he tells us, not only here, but also in his chapter on the history of the Suleymānites of Mecca, sought refuge in Yaman upon their expulsion by the Banu Hāshim. But Ibn Khaldūn's statements, in certain portions of his general history require to be received with some caution. Thus he tells us, on the authority of Ibn Sa'īd, that the Suleymānite refugees conquered Ṣa'dah from the Rassites, that they and their descendants were the recognized Imāms of Yaman throughout a period of at least a century and a half, that the Imām Aḥmad (al-Mutawakkil) who brought about the assassination of Fātik ibn Muḥammad in A.H. 553, and even the celebrated Imām al-Manṣūr 'Abd Allah, were members of the Suleymānite family. All these statements we know to be absolutely incorrect, as I shall yet have occasion to show.*

It must, however, be observed that not only 'Omārah, but also every writer on the history of Yaman, including the authors of the Hadī'ik and of the Yawaḳīt (Brit. Mus. Or. 3786 and 3771) invariably speak of the Ḥasanite family, to which Ghānim ibn Yaḥya belonged, under the designation of the Suleymānites. I was for a moment inclined to think that the circumstance simply pointed to the fact of their having obtained possession of the district, commonly known, at that time, as the Province of Suleymān ibn Ṭarf. But the explanation was one which I soon found reason to abandon.

With the exception of Ibn Khaldūn, none of the writers I have referred to, so far as I have been able to discover, explain who these people were, nor whence they came. I have nowhere found any allusion to kinship between them and the Imāms of Ṣa'dah, some trace of which could hardly fail to appear, if it had existed. Ibn Khaldūn, I am much inclined to think, is right so far as the origin of the family of Ghānim ibn Yaḥya is concerned. Khazraji gives us a fuller pedigree of the Sharīf than any I have found elsewhere, and calls him Ghānim son of Yaḥya son of Ḥamzah son of Wahnās (infra, Note 101). It seems not improbable that Ghānim's grandfather Ḥamzah ibn Wahnās was the identical Suleymānite Prince, who unsuccessfully disputed the sovereignty over Mecca with the Banu Hāshim, as may be read in the history of Mecca by Dr. Snouck-Hurgronje.*

I may add that I find mention in the Ḥadā'ik of two other members of the Suleymānite family, namely, at fol. 128 obv., 'Aly son of 'Īsa son of Ḥamzah son of Wahnās, living in A.H. 540, and at fol. 168 obv., Niẓām ad-dīn Yaḥya son of 'Aly (son of the preceding?), ruler over the old province of Suleymān ibn Ṭarf in A.H. 594-5, in the days, that is to say, of the Ayyūbite dynasty.

I have made no attempt to trace the subsequent history of the Suleymānites, but I find them mentioned in the life of the Imām al-Mutawakkil Yaḥya (Brit. Mus. Or. 3731). The author says (fol. 59 obv.) that in A.H. 963 (A.D. 1556), the Imām received letters from the Sulaymānite Sharīfs informing him of the success with which they had resisted the troops brought by the Turks from Egypt.

Al-Mutawakkil, a descendant of Yūsuf the Dā'y, died in A.H. 965.

NOTE 89 to p. 115.—The death of Fātik son of Manṣūr occurred, according to both al-Janadi and Khazraji in the month of Sha'bān of the year 531. The omission of the year from our text is probably an accident. Neither al-Janadi nor Khazraji give us particulars of the circumstances under which al-Fātik ibn Muḥammad, the successor of al-Fātik ibn Manṣūr, was raised to the throne. Al-Janadi merely repeats (fol. 187 rev.) what we have been told by 'Omārah, with the addition, as in Khazraji, that the Prince died leaving no issue. (Supra, p. 95.) The sentences I have enclosed in square brackets are wanting in the text and are supplied from Khazraji.

NOTE 90 to p. 118.—I have not found to what Arab stems these tribes, the Banu Mash'al, Zi'l and 'Imrān are to be assigned. But it is probable that like the Ḥakamites they were subdivisions of the Banu Madhhij. The Banu

* See also the passage from Ibn al-Athīr (supra, Note 31), in which certain Ḥasanites are spoken of as having removed to Yaman, at some time previous to A.H. 455.

Ḥarām are mentioned by Hamdāni (p. 116) as the principal subdivision of the Banu Nahd.

NOTE 91 to p. 121.—It has been sufficiently shown in the course of 'Omārah's narrative, that at least some ladies of exalted rank in Yaman, were by no means rigorous in their observance of the strict rules, that exclude Eastern women from personal intercourse with men. But in regard to this particular instance, it must be borne in mind, that Surūr was technically the slave of the Lady 'Alam. His admission into her presence was consequently no violation of Muhammadan law.

NOTE 92 to p. 121.—To stand, or even to sit before, that is to say facing a person, is a mark of respect to one superior in rank. (See supra, p. 122.)

NOTE 93 to p. 123.—Our text is manifestly corrupt at this point, and the portion of the translation enclosed within square brackets is from al-Janadi's version, which, throughout the description of Surūr's character and habits is, as is likewise that of al-Khazraji, an almost verbatim copy of 'Omārah. The following is the passage as it stands in the Paris MS. (p. 188. obv.).

وكان متى عاد بعد الركوب * وصل † الى دار السلطان يدخل ‡ فيسلم ثم يقف
بباب السلطان فيقضى حوائج الناس على اكمال الاحوال ثم اذا كان وقت
الغدا ذهب الى بيته فقال فيه حتى الزوال ثم يخرج الى المسجد § فلا
يشتغل بشئ غير الفريضة غير المسندات الصحيحة عن الرسول صلعم حتى العصر
فيصليه و يدخل داره يقعد حتى الغروب ثم يخرج الى المسجد الخ .

The words in the translation, placed within ordinary brackets, are taken, as will be seen, from 'Omārah.

NOTE 94 to p. 123.—Al-Janadi continues at this point as follows:—

و مسجده الى الآن يُعرف بمسجد سرور غربى مرتاع || العجوز بمدينة زبيد ولا

* Khi, للزيارة و العبادة كما ذكرنا † Khi, يصل

‡ Khi, فيدخل § Khi, في اول زوال الظل || Khi, مرتاع

يكاد يعرف من هو سرور الا احاد الناس و اما اهل زبيد فيعرفون انه من المساجد المنسوبة الى الحبشة .

His mosque is known to the present day under the name of Mosque of Surūr. It is situated in the city of Zabīd, on the western side of Martā' al-'Ajūz (the Old Woman's Pasture). Hardly any of the inhabitants of the town, saving a few of the best informed class, know who Surūr was. The vulgar only know that it is one of the mosques, the erection of which is ascribed to the Abyssinians.

Al-Janadi admits that his history of the early dynasties is much abridged. "If," he says to his readers, after recording the death of Mann Allah,—

If you desire fuller information, you will find it in the Mufīd of 'Omārah. I have abridged much of his history, but always in such wise, that in what I mention there shall be, either in express terms or by implication, something that points to what I have omitted.

إذا اردت تحقيق ذلك فانظر مفيد عمارة فاني اختصت كثيراً من اخباره لكن بشرط ان فيما ذكرت دليلاً اما (على ما ؟) لم اذكره صريحاً او مفهوماً .

In treating of the life and character of Surūr, al-Janadi departs from his rule, and introduces into his pages an almost verbatim copy of 'Omārah's account of the celebrated Wazīr. The examples afforded by the life and conduct of a pious Muslim furnish, in the eyes of an Arab writer, a far worthier theme for the historian's pen, than the record of the rise and fall of dynasties or of any merely secular events. Here are al-Janadi's own words on the subject:—

A full account of Surūr's qualities, of his nobility of character, of his bravery and of his righteousness, would be of great length. What 'Omārah has recorded on the subject is widely known. Let him who more would read, turn to that writer's book al-Mufīd. The student may do so, although, in the case of Surūr, I have written at far greater length than I have allowed myself to do in other instances. Thus have I done on account of Surūr's great merits. I have studied to acquaint myself with all that to which 'Omārah directs attention, and I have entered into detailed particulars on the subject of Surūr's virtues, such as justify indifference to other things which I have omitted.

NOTE 95 to p. 124.—Al-Janadi mentions the pedigree of 'Aly ibn Mahdy, but it is more fully given by Khazraji (p. 97) as follows:—Abu 'l-Ḥasan 'Aly son of (Mahdy son of) Muḥammad, son of 'Aly son of Da-ūd, son of Muḥammad son of 'Abd Allah, son of Muḥammad son of Aḥmad, son of 'Abd al-Kāhir (?) son of 'Abd Allah son of al-Aghlab son of Abu 'l-Fawāris son of Maimūn, of the tribe of Ḥimyar and subtribe of Ru'ayn.

Al-Janadi's rendering of the geographical names mentioned in our text is as follows:—

The commencement of his career was at al-'Irk, the lower portion of the valley of the river Zabīd. It commences with the village of al-'Anbarah and (comprises) al-Ḳuḍayb, al-Ahwāb, al-Mu'tafi (?), Wāsīt and its neighbourhood. He acquired there a great reputation for piety.

A few lines further on he supplies us with the vocalization of the name al-Ḳuḍayb.

اول ما ظهر امره بالعرك التى هى سفلى وادى زبيد اولها قرية العنبرة والنضيب والاهواب والمعفى واسط وما قاربها من الاماكن و صار له فيها ذكر فى الصلاح .

I have nowhere else met with the name العرك. Al-'Irk العرق has been mentioned at p. 15 as close to Zabīd. See also Janadi, p. 183, and Yāḳūt. Ibn al-Mujāwir (Sprenger, p. 149) says that Wādi 'l-'Irk is another name for Kuwayḍ قويض half a parasang from Wādi Rima' and four from Zabīd. Al-Ārah or al-'Ārah, it will be noticed, is omitted by both Janadi and Khazraji; but al-'Ārah is described by Ibn al-Mujāwir, who says that its inhabitants are fishermen and that close to it are the ruins of a city, among which the remains of two mosques could still be distinguished. (Sprenger, p. 149-50.)

To 'Omārah's description of Ibn Mahdy, al-Janadi adds that he was of a tender heart, quick in shedding abundant tears, كان رقيق القلب قريب الدمعة غزيرها, an account of him which need not perhaps be regarded as wholly inconsistent with the savage cruelty he displayed. The author's meaning, however, is that Ibn Mahdy was in the habit of lamenting with tears his unworthiness in the face of God.

The words, "he bore between his eyes the traces of his prostrations," are an allusion to a passage in the Kur'ān (S. xlvi. v. 29): Thou shalt see them (the believers) bowing down and prostrating themselves, winning the grace of God and his approbation. Their distinguishing mark is on their brows, the traces of their prostrations.

It is related by the commentators that 'Aly Zayn al-Ābidīn, grandson of 'Aly the Prophet's son-in-law, and 'Aly son of 'Abd Allah son of 'Abbās, ancestor of the Abbasides, were surnamed Dhu 'th-thafnāt, because the frequency of their prostrations in prayer had caused induration of the skin on the part of their foreheads that touched the ground. There is a tradition that the Prophet disapproved of such marks, but his disapproval is reconciled with the reverence in which the memory of the two 'Alys is held, by an explanation that what the Prophet condemned were marks purposely produced, by undue pressure of the forehead upon the ground. Such marks are signs of hypocrisy and impiety, from which, adds the pious writer quoted by the author of the Kashshāf, we must pray God to deliver us.

The word i'tazala, which occurs in Ibn Khaldūn as well as in 'Omārah, and which I have translated he led a life of retirement, might also be taken to signify that Ibn Mahdy joined the sect of the Mu'tazilites. But Ibn Khaldūn styles him the Khārijite, and is supported therein by 'Omārah's statement that Ibn Mahdy held the doctrine which treats sin as infidelity (supra, p. 132). It deserves, perhaps, to be remarked that 'Omārah speaks of Ibn Mahdy as al-Khārij (supra, p. 95), which, however, simply signifies the rebel.

فكانها نتجت قياما تحتهم و كانهم ولدوا على صهواتها

Al-Janadi says that it was in the year 536 that the Queen 'Alam relieved Ibn Mahdy and his followers from payment of the Kharāj (land assessment), and that after the death of the queen (in A.H. 545), his followers greatly increased in numbers.

The same writer gives us the following khutbah or sermon, delivered by Ibn Mahdy to his followers:—

“I swear by Allah, unto none but unto me and unto you hath God committed the doom of the Abyssinians. Soon, under his will, ye shall know. By Allah the most great, the Lord of Moses and of Abraham, I shall be unto them as the suffocating wind of ‘Ād and as the exterminating cry of Thamūd.* Verily, I speak unto you and ye are not deceived, I promise and your hopes shall not be frustrated. Of a certainty, though now ye be few ye shall be many, though ye be humble ye shall be honoured, though ye be lowly ye shall be exalted, and your fame shall be a proverb among Arabs and non-Arabs; that God may requite them that do evil according to their deeds, and that unto them that do good he may grant his surpassing rewards.† The time is near. Await with patience. By the Divine Truth of God most great, charged unto every believer and maintainer of the Unity, I will of a certainty give unto you the daughters of the Abyssinians and their sisters, to be your servants, and I will deliver into your hands their riches and their children.’

“Then he recited the verse: God hath promised unto such of you as believe and are well-doing, that they shall of a certainty inherit the earth, as it hath been inherited by those (the faithful) that were before them. Verily, he will establish among them the faith they have willingly received, and of a certainty, for their fears he will substitute safety.” †

NOTE 97 to p. 126.—Janadi says that after the queen's death, a great number of people swore allegiance to Ibn Mahdy at the village of Ḳuḍayb. This he adds was in A.H. 546. Ibn Mahdy then proceeded to ad-Dāshir, where he remained for a time, and thence he went up to the fortress of ash-Sharaf. I have substituted in our text the name Dāshir for Sharaf. The latter, as is shown by the words that follow, cannot be correct, and Khazraji, as well as Janadi, writes Dāshir. In the printed edition of Yāḳūt's Geographical Dictionary, the name appears as Dāsir, and the author says it stood at the distance of a night's journey from Zabīd. (See supra, p. 128.) Ash-Sharaf was one of the fortresses situated on Mount Wuṣāb.

Instead of Ḥaywān, the name of the tribe to which ash-Sharaf is said to have belonged, we may perhaps read Ḥaydān. Hamḍāni mentions the Banu Ḥaydān as sons of 'Amru son of al-Ḥāf (p. 53, l. 20). They were, therefore, descendants of Ḳuḍā'ah, but it has been seen (see supra, Note 3, pp. 217 and 218), that certain Khawlānites in Yaman were regarded as Ḳuḍā'ites.

NOTE 98 to p. 129.—By omitting the words printed in italics, in accordance with the amendments I have indicated in the footnotes to the printed text, the succession of the Ziyādite Princes here presented will agree with that previously given by 'Omārah in his history of the dynasty (supra, p. 5), and after him by al-Janadi and subsequent writers. The present passage, it is true, may be suspected of being an interpolation and has, perhaps, been corrupted by the transcribers. But the accuracy of 'Omārah's previous account of the succession is itself by no means free from doubt, and the interpolation, if it be one, is perhaps capable of helping us to a more correct appreciation of the facts. Thus Abu 'l-Jaysh Ishāḳ is here stated to have been grandson, instead of son of Ibrahīm—Ishāḳ, son of Muḥammad son of Ibrahīm. The latter, in like manner, is represented as grandson of Muḥammad ibn Ziyād—Ibrahīm son of 'Abd Allah son of (Muḥammad ibn) Ziyād. Ibrahīm, we have been told, died in A.H. 289, eighty-six years therefore after the arrival of Muḥammad ibn Ziyād in Yaman, and Abu 'l-Jaysh Ishāq in A.H. 371, eighty-two years after the death of Ibrāhīm, who it is said was Ishāq's father. (See supra, Note 13.)

Al-Janadi offers some remarks which may be taken to show that his mind was open to doubt as to the perfect accuracy of 'Omārah's account of the Ziyādite succession. He mentions and quotes (fol. 182 rev.) certain marginal notes he found on a copy of 'Omārah's Mufīd. As to their subject matter, it is sufficient to say that the writer omits the reign of Ziyād son of Ibrāhīm, that he represents Ḥusayn ibn Salāmah as having, in A.H. 371, succeeded Ishāq, and that he believes the latter was he who bore the surname Abu 'l-Jaysh. Al-Janadi proceeds as follows:—

According to the annotator, each of the Banu Ziyād enjoyed a long life, and the members of the dynasty were few in number. According to 'Omārah they were many, of some the life was long, of others it was short. God knoweth the truth. The annotator says also that Ḥusayn ibn Salāmah died in 403, one year later than the date mentioned by 'Omārah. Know that in such historical details, both truth and falsehood, amplitude and scantiness are to be found. This is caused by transcribers' variations, which give rise to diversities in historical works. Discrepancies will be found even between one copy and another of the same book, written by the same author. The well-informed are fully aware of these facts. It may be that some critic will take exception to the matter I have extracted from the Mufīd and other works, but the only grounds for his censure will be his own inadequate study of historical works, and his neglect to compare different copies with one another. That which clearly appears is, that the uncontrolled rulership of the Banu Ziyād endured from A.H. 203 to 371, 168 years. . . .

The substance of what follows has already been given in Note 13, and the following is the Arabic text of the entire passage:—

NOTE 99 to p. 131.—I can make no other sense of the words as they stand in the text. They have no doubt been inaccurately transcribed, but they have also very much the appearance of an interpolation, and it is to be remarked that they are not to be found in the corresponding passage of al-Khazraji. We have seen that according to both al-Janadi and Khazraji (supra, Note 56), Manṣūr son of al-Mufaddal was living in 547 and died before A.H. 550. On the other hand, the present passage may be compared with what is said by Ibn Khaldūn (supra, p. 151 and p. 174). But again it must be remarked that if Manṣūr was twenty years of age, or even less, when his father died in A.H. 504, and if he lived to the age of one hundred or even ninety, then he must have survived 'Omārah. And 'Omārah's history, we are told, was written in A.H. 564. The word ثلاثين, thirty, in our text, might be an error for ثمانين, eighty. But if, as seems probable, Manṣūr was in his childhood when his father died in 504, then it may well be that when he himself died, say in 548, he had been in possession of his inheritance for about thirty years.

NOTE 100 to p. 132.—Ash-Shamāhi (sic) is mentioned by Khazraji (fol. 103 and 108) as also the fortress of Majmā'ah,

* Read مائة وثمانية وستون

Sharyāk and Thālithah, and he allows it to be inferred that these three were situated in Mikhlāf Ja'far. Yākūt says that Majma'ah stood on Wādi Nakhlah. Janadi has ath-Thālathi (supra, p. 201), and Sharyāk is mentioned in the passages borrowed from Ibn Iḥātim in Note 101 (p. 297). Damt is included in the list of places given by Khazraji. It is mentioned by Hamdāni (p. 100, l. 18) as situated in the district of Saḥūl, also by the author of the Marāsid, on the authority of al-Janadi, from whom he adds a not very intelligible extract. Taḥlah is not mentioned by Khazraji, and looks as if it might be a careless repetition of Nakhlah.

NOTE 101 to p. 134.—According to al-Janadi, 'Aly ibn Mahdy was buried in Zabīd, at a spot he had himself selected. The mosque built over his grave was known as al-Mushhad (the Mausoleum) and it stood opposite the college known under the name of al-Maylīn (or al-Maylūn). The minaret was still standing in al-Janadi's days, but the mosque had been converted into a stable for the use of one of the Turkish kings. According to al-Khazraji, the Rasūlite Sultān al-Ashraf Isma'il (A.H. 778-803) laid the foundations of a college on the site of the tomb, but abandoned his intention of building. The spot was converted into a halting-place for the Sultān's camels, and continued to be so used down to the writer's days.

Mahdy, son and successor of 'Aly ibn Mahdy, attacked and massacred the inhabitants of Lahj in 556 and 557. Next he captured Janad, slaughtered its inhabitants and cast the bodies of the slain into the well of the mosque. This was in 558. He returned to Zabīd suffering from a disease under the effects of which his body, after being covered with marks described as having the appearance of being the effects of fire, became a mass of open sores. Such was his condition that he had to be carried down from Ta'izz in a litter lined with carded cotton wool. He died on the first of Dhu 'l-Ḳa'dah 558.

Al Khazraji, after quoting the above from al-Janadi, proceeds to say that a different account of the succession is given by the author of the Iḳd ath-Thamīn. According, he says, to that writer, Ibn Mahdy was succeeded by his two sons, Mahdy and 'Abd an-Naby, the latter as general administrator of the affairs of the kingdom and the former as military chief. Mahdy is stated by the writer to have returned from his expedition to the Highlands in Muḥarram 559, and to have died at Zabīd on the 18th of that month. 'Abd an-Naby now became sole ruler, and continued his brother's career of conquest and devastation. In 560 he attacked the Sulaymanite Sharifs. A party of the enemy, commanded by the Amīr Wahhās ibn Ghānim ibn Yaḥya ibn Ḥamza ibn Wahhās, was utterly destroyed, the Amīr himself being among the slain. Khazraji says that 'Abd an-Naby composed on that occasion a poem of the class styled Musammaṭah, which further on (p. 106) he gives in full. He does so after quoting a passage from 'Omārah which is not to be found in the British Museum text. It is to the effect that 'Abd an-Naby was an excellent poet as well as a brave warrior, and that he was the author of a collection of poems in which is included the Musammaṭah in question.

Continuing to write on the authority of the author of the 'Ikd ath-Thamān, al-Khazraji gives us particulars of 'Abd an-Naby's conquests and depredations in the Highlands of Yaman. In 568 he laid siege to Aden, whereupon Ḥātim son of 'Aly son of the Dā'y Saba son of Abu Su'ūd proceeded to Ṣan'ā and prevailed upon the Hamdānite Sulṭān 'Aly ibn Ḥātim, ancestor of the historian, to assist the Zuray'ites against the common enemy. 'Aly ibn Ḥātim, a member, like the Zuray'ites, of the sub-tribe of Yām, consented, on condition of his being supported by the tribes of Janb and Madhhij. Ḥātim the Zuray'ite proceeded to Dhamār and obtained promises from Sulṭān 'Abd Allah ibn Yaḥya and from Sheykh Zayd ibn 'Amru, chiefs of the two tribes, to join in the alliance. 'Aly ibn Ḥātim thereupon marched from Ṣan'ā, in the month of Ṣafar 569, at the head of the Hamdānites, accompanied by tribesmen of Sinḥāu, Shihāb, Nahd and others.* The Arabs combined their forces in the district of Saḥūl. The army of 'Abd an-Naby was attacked and utterly routed near Ibb, by the allies, who advanced successively to Dhu Jiblah and to Janad, both of which were found to have been abandoned by the enemy. The Mahdyites were again attacked and dispersed at Dhu 'Udaynah near Ta'izz. Intelligence came from Aden that its siege was raised, and that the camp formed by 'Abd an-Naby at Za'āzi had been abandoned. The Hamdānite Sulṭān 'Aly ibn Ḥātim would have pursued the enemy into Tihāmah, but his allies of the tribes of Janb and Madhhij refused, and he returned to Ṣan'ā. His brilliant but brief campaign thus came to an end. He started from Janad on Saturday 19th Rabi' Awwal, reached Dhu Ashrak in the evening, and Dhu Jiblah on the following day. Here he halted for six days and ordered the dismantling of the great palace, then occupied by a Sulayhite Princess, Arwa, daughter of 'Aly son of 'Abdallah son of Muḥammad.

* The Banu Shihāb are mentioned by Hamdāni (p. 114, 23) as a sub-tribe of the Banu Kindah. The Banu Nahd were a sub-tribe of Ḳudā'ah, but the name was also borne by a sub-tribe of Hamdān. At p. 92, l. 18, Hamdāni calls the Nahdites sub-tribe of the Banu 'Ans.

'Abd an-Naby returned to Zabīd, where he soon afterwards received intelligence that Tūrān Shah the Ayyūbite was at Maḥall Abi Turāb, and that the Sharif Kāsim son of Ghānim son of Yaḥya son of Ḥamzah son of Wahnās, eager to avenge the death of his brother, had allied himself with the invaders.

I have mentioned in the Introduction to this book, that the foregoing particulars, extracted by al-Khazraji from the Ikd ath-Thamīn of Ibn Ḥātim, are not to be found in the copy of the MS. by the same author preserved in the Library of the British Museum. The latter commences with a somewhat detailed account of the conquest of Yaman by Tūrān Shah, of which the following is a brief summary.

On the arrival of Tūrān Shah, he was joined at Ḥarad, also called Maḥall Abi Turāb, by the Sulaymanite Amīr Kāsim ibn Ghānim, within whose dominions Ḥarad was situated. The allies marched thence at the end of Ramaḍān A.H. 569. On the 7th Shawwāl they reached Zabīd, of which they gained possession at sunrise on the 9th. The town was looted, 'Abd an-Naby and his two brothers were taken prisoners, and the Sharif Kāsim started on his return to his country on the 3rd (read 13th?) of the month. Tūrān Shah remained at Zabīd until the beginning of the following month of Dhu 'l-Ḥa'dah. He then marched upon Ta'izz, which surrendered. Next he took possession of Janad, and thence he marched upon Aden, which was captured on the 20th and looted.* The Sulṭān returned to the Mikhlāf Ja'far, possessed himself of 'Ia'kar, and then marched against the northern provinces. He started from

Dhu Jiblah and ascended Naqil Şayd on the 28th Dhu 'l-Hijjah. At Darwān (?), Sulţān 'Abd Allah ibn Yaḥya the Janbite tendered his submission. Al-Muṣannafah (Maşna'ah ?) * was captured from Shaykh Muḥammad ibn Zayd al-Ba'yari al-Janbi. Thence the Sulţān proceeded to Dhamār, near which he was attacked by the Jaubites and other Arabs. The advance of the Ayyūbites was severely contested, but the Arabs were eventually defeated, and driven with heavy loss into the fortress of Hīrrān. Tūrān Shah reached the outskirts of Şan'ā on the 7th (17th ?) Muḥarram 570. 'Aly ibn Ḥātim escaped to the fortress of Bīrāsh and Tūrān Shah, without stopping to secure the city, set out on his return to Zabīd. Marching by way of Naqil as-Saud, he was harassed with attacks by the Banu Sinḥān and Shihāb, and next by the people of Bura', but he reached his destination in safety. In Jamādi 'l-Awwal he returned to Janad, and thenceforward occupied himself in gaining possession of the mountain fortresses. He successively captured Şabir, Bādīyah (? ١٥١) Sharyāk, 'Azzan-Dhakhir, Numayr which belonged to the Amīr Maṣūr (son of 'Imrān ?) son of Muḥammad son of Saba, then Munīf, then Samadān. He did not attack Sawā, which was held by Ibn as-Sabā'y. Next he besieged Dumlūwah, where the children of the Dā'y 'Imrān were living under the guardianship of Janhar. Mangonels were erected, wherewith to batter the walls of the fortress, but the missiles rebounded harmlessly from the rocks below. Finally, however, Jaubar surrendered the castle in exchange for certain low-lying lands in the neighbourhood.† In Sha'bān, Tūrān Shah was at Dhu Jiblah, where he received intelligence of disturbances in Tibāmah and ordered 'Abd an-Nabī and his two brothers Aḥmad and Yaḥya to be put to death. They were executed at Zabīd on the 7th Rajab, 570. Twelve months later, after ordering the execution of Yāsir ibn Bilāl, Tūrān Shah started from Yaman on his return to Egypt.

tinctly told, succeeded to the office of Dā'y, on the death of al-Mukarram (supra, p. 42 and Note 37). Saba ibn Aḥmad, as has been seen, died in A.H. 492. Ibn Najīb ad-Daulah arrived in Yaman, bearing the title of Dā'y, in A.H. 513. We have, therefore, an interval of twenty-one years during which, if our MS. can be trusted, the Dā'yship was successively held by two men. The name of one is left in blank, and as to the designation of Sultān, accorded to the other, it need not perhaps detain us, considering how indiscriminately the title seems to have been used. See, for instance, the two extracts from Ibn Ḥātīm in the preceding note, also Hamdāni, p. 119, l. 22-24.

But there is much else calculated to cast doubt upon the accuracy of our text. Its many corruptions obscure the sense of several passages and the unsatisfactory manner in which the edict of the Khalīfah al-Āmir is introduced and interrupts the subject of the chapter, is of itself suspicious. On its being resumed, we find no mention of 'Abd Allah ibn 'Abd Allah, the Sulayhite, who, we have been told (supra, p. 60), exercised the functions of Dā'y after Ibn Najīb ad-Daulah; nor any explanation of the title of Dā'y given to a certain Muḥammad ibn Abi 'l-'Arab, who is stated (supra, p. 57), to have met Ibn Najīb ad-Daulah on his arrival at Dahlak. The sentence (p. 137) beginning with the words, She next transferred—or, the office of Dā'y was next transferred to the family of Zuray', is probably an interpolation, borrowed, it may be, from al-Janadi, but anyhow misplaced. Al-Janadi writes as follows (fol. 184 rev.):—

When Ibn Najīb ad-Daulah departed, as will hereafter be related, the queen appointed in his place the Dā'y Ibrahīm ibn al-Ḥusayn al-Ḥāmidī. When she received tidings of the death of the reigning Khalīfah (al-Āmir) and of the accession of his successor al-Ḥāfiẓ to the Egyptian Khalīfate, she transferred the office of Dā'y to the family of Zuray', as will hereafter be clearly explained. "Sufficient," she said, "for the family of aṣ-Ṣulayḥi, is what they have done in the cause of our Lords (the Fāṭimite Khalīfahs), upon whom be the blessings of God." This occurred after the death of the Dā'y Ibrahīm, and the first of the family of Zuray' to be invested with the dignity was Saba son of Abu Su'ūd.

Further on (fol. 185 rev.), after relating the end of Ibn Najīb ad-Daulah's career in Yaman, al-Janadi repeats the above in almost the same words, but adds that Ibrāhīm al-Ḥāmīdī did not long survive his appointment, and that at about the time he died, came tidings of the death of the reigning Khalīfah at Cairo, whereupon the queen transferred the office of Dā'y to the Zuray'ites.

Al-Āmir was assassinated at Cairo by the Nizārites, in Dhu 'l-Ka'dah (the eleventh month) of the year 524. Our MS. of 'Omārah tells us that Ibrāhīm ibn al-Ḥusayn al-Ḥāmīdī was appointed in the second year of the reign of al-Ḥāfiz, say therefore in A.H. 526. If this were so, the presumption would be that the Dā'y 'Abd Allah ibn 'Abd Allah held the office from the date of the disappearance of Ibn Najīb ad-Daulah in 520, for six years.

But al-Janadi's version, that Ibrāhīm al-Ḥāmīdī was appointed on the departure (or not long after the departure?) of Ibn Najīb ad-Daulah, seems the more probable one, and it is supported by his further statement that Ibrāhīm al-Ḥāmīdī died at about the time when intelligence of al-Āmir's death reached Yaman, say the beginning of A.H. 525.

If we now adopt 'Omārah's statement that Ibrāhīm was succeeded by his son Ḥātīm, we find ourselves naturally led to the further date mentioned in 'Omārah, namely the second year of the reign of al-Ḥāfiz, which, however, must, in such case, be regarded as the probable date when the Dā'yship was finally transferred to the family of Zuray'.

There is, however, another point which requires to be taken into consideration. Ḥātīm son of Ibrāhīm son of Ḥusayn al-Ḥāmīdī is known to have been a powerful Ḥamdānite chief, who for three years disputed the throne of Ṣan'ā with the reigning Sulṭān 'Aly ibn Ḥātīm, and this occurred between the years 561 and 564. These dates can only be reconciled with those given above, on the supposition that Ḥātīm son of Ibrāhīm received the office of Dā'y when little more than a child. But that may possibly help to explain how it came to pass that he held it for so short a time.

NOTE 103 to p. 136.—The Khalifah al-Āmir died leaving no male issue, six months after the birth of the child mentioned in the text. The infant son, in whom such brilliant hopes were centred, cannot, therefore, have lived more than a few weeks. But at the death of the Khalifah, one of the ladies of his ḥarīm was found to be enceinte. Al-Ḥāfiẓ was consequently allowed to reign only as regent until the birth of the child, which turned out to be a girl. This may perhaps explain the statement in our text, that in his first communication to the queen, al-Ḥāfiẓ assumed only the title of heir-apparent to the Khalifate.

NOTE 104 to p. 139.—Ibn Khaldūn's narrative is by no means clear at this point, and something has doubtless been omitted, either through inadvertence on the part of the author, or through carelessness on that of the transcribers.

Upon the death of al-Aswad the 'Ansite, Fayruz assumed the government of Ṣan'ā, in which he was confirmed by the Prophet's successor Abu Bakr, who appointed Dadhwayh and Ḳays ibn Makshūḥ to be his colleagues and assistants. But tidings of the Prophet's death having spread in Yaman, a rebellion again broke out. Ḳays placed himself at its head and summoned the apostate followers of al-Aswad to his assistance. He concealed his designs from his colleagues, and invited them to a feast. Dadhwayh was the first to arrive and was immediately massacred. Fayrūz, when approaching the appointed spot, obtained information of what had occurred, through accidentally overhearing the conversation of two Arab women. He turned and fled, and reached the mountain of Khaulān in safety. Here he was joined by such as had continued faithful to the religion of the Prophet, and with the aid of the Banu 'Oḳayl, he marched upon Ṣan'ā, attacked and defeated Ḳays and put him to flight. Ḳays eventually fell into the hands of Muhājir ibn Abi Umayyah. He was sent to Abu Bakr, by whom he was pardoned.

The word Abna was used to designate a mixed race, the naturalized descendants of the Persian troops sent to Yaman by Anūshirwān, with whose assistance the Abyssinians were expelled from Arabia.

NOTE 105 to p. 139.—Ya'la is also called son of Umayyah. The latter, it is explained, was the name of his father, and Munyah that of his mother. The Camel which gave its name to the sanguinary battle fought between 'Aly and his opponents in A.H. 36, and upon which 'Ā'ishah was mounted, is said to have been given to her by Ya'la.

NOTE 106 to p. 142.—The assassination of al-Mutawakkil and the abdication of al-Musta'in occurred long before the reign of Abu'l-Jaysh. The words in the text must therefore be applied to his predecessors. Cf. supra, p. 15 and Note 13.

NOTE 107 to p. 142.—Ibn Khaldūn's account of the Zaydite Imāms of Ṣa'dah, known under the designation of Rassites, will be found at p. 184.

In his chapter on the Shī'ites (vol. i. p. 164), he enters into particulars of the principal sects into which the adherents of 'Aly have divided themselves, and he gives an account, among others, of the Zaydites.

All the Shī'ites, he begins by pointing out, agree upon the fundamental point that 'Aly, son-in-law of the Prophet, was his appointed and legitimate successor. But the question of the principle upon which his rights are founded has become matter of dispute. A large section, the Imāmites, in which are comprised the *Dodekites and Ismailites, contend that 'Aly's appointment to the office was absolutely in virtue of his personality, that his descendants and heirs have followed in regular succession under the same rule, and that no human right exists to withhold recognition of his or their claims. The Imāmites, therefore, disown the authority of the "two Elders" (Abu Bakr and 'Omar).

The Zaydites, on the other hand, whilst admitting that 'Aly was the appointed heir of the Prophet, maintain that he was appointed not by reason of his individuality, but in virtue of his personal merits. They claim, consequently, the right of selection from among the descendants of Fāṭimah. The person to be invested with the office of Imām must, they contend, be learned, pious, generous and brave. It is further required that he shall stand forth and publicly claim recognition of his authority. They own the existence of a limitation of choice, one that prohibits the actual substitution of the consideration of merit for that of individuality, although they refrain at the same time, from disavowing the Imāmate of the two "elders," consequently admitting, as is remarked, the authority of the inferior (Abu Bakr and then 'Omar), notwithstanding the presence of the superior, namely 'Aly. A charge is moreover made against them, that they are tainted with the doctrines of the Mu'tazilites, and their founder Zayd, it is said, studied under Wāṣil ibn 'Aṭā.

The Zaydites, as was to be expected, have separated themselves from the Dodekites and Ismailites, on the question of the rightful holders of the Imāmate. All agree in the recognition of 'Aly, of his two sons Ḥasan and Ḥusayn and, according to Ibn Khaldūn, of his grandson 'Aly Zayn al-'Ābidīn.* But whilst their opponents assign the succession, next after Zayn al-'Ābidīn to his son Muḥammad al-Bāḳir, the Zaydites attribute it to Muḥammad's brother Zayd, the founder of their sect, who, they say, was succeeded by his son Yaḥya. Starting from that point, the Zaydites are not, however, in complete accord. Some, according to Ibn Khaldūn, hold that Yaḥya was followed by his brother 'Īsa. Others assert that Yaḥya before his death bequeathed his office to Muḥammad an-Nafs az-Zakīyyah, the Pure in Spirit, thus transferring the Imāmate from the family of Ḥusayn to that of Hasan. Muḥammad, they further hold, was succeeded by his brother Ibrahīm, who was killed towards the latter end of A.H. 145, and survived his brother only two months. According to others, Muḥammad's successor was Muḥammad son of al-Ḳāsim son of 'Aly son of 'Omar brother of Zayd. Others again assign the succession to Idrīs, brother of an-Nafs az-Zakīyyah and originator of the Idrīsīte dynasty in Africa, where he founded the city of Fez.

record of the succession of their Imāms. At a subsequent period to that just referred to, the two great sections, that of the Persian and that of the Yamanite or Arabian Zaydites, have in only a few isolated instances submitted to the authority of the same Imām. On both sides the absolute supremacy of the lawful Imām over the entire body is distinctly admitted. But the distance that separated the two sections geographically from one another, and the impossibility of active co-operation between them in the political objects for which they respectively strove, created a practical difficulty, which only in a few rare instances was partially overcome. In Arabia itself, moreover, there has been frequent rivalry between different claimants, each of whom has been recognized by one party and disavowed by the other. It follows, consequently, that great discrepancies are found between the lists of Imāms given by different writers.

Among the books I have had the opportunity of consulting, the Yawaḳīt as-Siyar gives the fullest list of the Imāms, and the author brings it down to the middle of the seventh century of the Hijrah. He mentions many names omitted by other writers, and I have included them in the Genealogical Table appended to this note.

The table will enable the reader to follow more easily the relation which the different families bear to one another. The names of the Persian Imāms, who successively gained supreme power in the provinces of Daylam and Tabaristān, are printed in italics. Ḥasan son of Zayd and his brother Muḥammad (descendants of Ḥasan son of Zayd son of Ḥasan) are included, because, although they are not reckoned as Zaydites, they undoubtedly prepared the way for the Imāms, who afterwards, like themselves, attained supreme power on the southern shores of the Caspian.

I have added, for the sake of convenience, the succession of the Dodekite and of the early Ismailite Imāms. The former are distinguished by Roman numerals and the latter by capital letters. The Ismailites seceded upon the death of the sixth Imām Ja'far aṣ-Ṣādīk. His son Isma'īl died before him, but the Ismailites hold that the latter was the designated seventh Imām, and that the succession passed on to his son, Muḥammad al-Maktūm, the Shrouded or Concealed, from whom 'Obayd Allah "the Mahdy," founder of the Fatimite Khalifate and Imām of the Ismailites, claimed to be descended.

NOTE 108 to p. 149.—In the British Museum MS. of Ibn Khaldūn a genealogical table is added at the end of this chapter, according to which al-Manşūr Saba was descended from ‘Aly the Sulayhite, father of the Ḳāḍi Muḥammad and grandfather of the Dā’y ‘Aly.

NOTE 109 to p. 153.—Ibn Khaldūn seems here to confuse with one another the incidents of the expedition undertaken by the Dā’y al-Mukarram for the rescue of his mother, and those of the conspiracy that brought about the death of Sa‘īd son of Najāḥ.

The year 497, as that in which al-Mukarram released his mother from captivity, is so given in both the London and Paris MSS. as well as in the Bulāḳ edition. But it is manifestly wrong, as indeed may be judged from the date 479, which immediately follows. We may probably read 475. Aş-Şulayḥi was killed at the latter end of 473 (see Note 31), and his mother’s captivity, we are told by ‘Omārah, lasted an entire year.

Ibn Khaldūn’s account of Sa‘īd’s death also requires correction. The introduction of the name of Ya‘fur, although it is to be found in both MSS. as well as in the printed edition, is quite unsustainable, and has perhaps simply arisen through the copyist—perhaps, indeed, the author—having carelessly allowed his eye to be caught with the resemblance (especially in the Arabic character) between the verb Yughri, which occurs in the text, and the name Ya‘fur. The statement that Sa‘īd’s head was carried to Zabīd is likewise an error.

It will, moreover, be remarked that Ibn Khaldūn’s account of the proceedings of Jayyāsh and of his wazīr Khalf, on their return to Zabīd, differs considerably from that supplied by 'Omārah. All these errors, it may be suspected, are the result of a careless reading of the original text, for which, however, Ibn Sa'īd is perhaps in the first place responsible.

NOTE 110 to p. 159.—Bayhaḡ is the name of a district near Naysāpūr, after which several persons of note have been named.

One, Abu Bakr Aḡmad ibn al-Ḥusayn ibn 'Aly al-Bayhaḡi, is identified by Johannsen with the writer quoted by Dayba' in his history of Zabīd. He died in A.H. 453 and his life is given by Ibn Khallikān (de Slane, i. 57). His son Isma'īl ibn Aḡmad al-Bayhaḡi, also a distinguished man, died in A.H. 507.

But the author, so frequently quoted by Ibn Khaldūn, is one who appears to have written on the history of a much later period. He speaks of al-Mūṭi, the title attributed by Ibn Khaldūn to the Imām Aḡmad ibn Ḥusayn, who arose in A.H. 646. See supra, p. 175, and cf. the passage in Ibn Khaldūn's enumeration of the tribes of Kahlān, vol. ii. p. 252 (Bulāḡ ed.). Ibn al-Athīr (vol. xi. p. 249) quotes a work entitled Kitāb Masārib it-Tajārib by Abu 'l-Ḥasan ibn Abi 'l-Ḳāsim al-Bayhaḡi, who was apparently a contemporary of the historian and who may have survived him. If, however, this be the person referred to by Ibn Khaldūn, he must have lived and have continued to write down to a period more than twenty years subsequent to the death of Ibn al-Athīr in A.H. 630.

Touching the descent of the Banu Ma'n, see Notes 19 and 20.

NOTE 111 to p. 160.—A description of the fortress of Duḡlūwah is given by al-Ḥamdāni in his Geography of Arabia (ed. D. H. Müller, p. 76). It was built, he says, upon a hill, the summit of which, measuring four hundred cubits in length and the same in width, comprised dwelling-places, a large mosque, and a tree capable of sheltering one hundred men, which he calls al-Kulhumah.* The hill was an offshoot of Mount Ṣilu, from which it was, however, completely isolated, and which rose at a distance of one hundred cubits on the south. On its eastern side, Khadīr was distant two hours' journey.* On the north was the market-place of Juwwah and the stream Wādi al-Jannāt. On the west, where the height of the hill was double that on the south, was a tethering-place for the horses belonging to the owner of the fortress. He inhabited a castle on Mount Šilu, at the distance of a bow-shot. The gate of the fortress of Dumlūwah was on its northern side, and access was obtained to the summit by means of two ladders, each of fourteen steps. Between the two was the prison, and the guard house above it. Water of excellent quality was abundantly supplied to the inhabitants by a stream, flowing close to the foot of the lower flight of steps.

This stream flowed into Wādi al-Jannāt, which, after receiving numerous other streams and torrents, was joined by the Wādi Warazāu (see U. Uarasan on Manzoni's map), and the united waters, increased on their way by other tributaries, flowed down to the sea in the neighbourhood of Aden.

Hamdāni's words as above, in speaking of Juwwah, indicate a position for that place at or very near the town, marked in Manzoni's map under the name of Mavia (Māwīyah?). Juwwah, as is shown by our text, stood on the highway from Aden, and it seems very probable that it and Mavia are one and the same place. Reynaud, in his translation of Abu 'l-Fada, writes: "Aldjoue, nom d'une petite ville très-connue sur la grande route des montagnes."

Haudāni (p. 190, l. 8,) mentions the castle of Juwwah, which seems to be one and the same with Dumlūwah.

NOTE 112 to p. 161.—The life of the poet Ibn Ḳalāḳis, the Lakhmite is given by Ibn Khallikān (de Slane's translation, vol. iii. p. 537), where a continuation of the line quoted in the text is supplied. Ibn Ḳalāḳis, we are told, was born at Alexandria in 532 and died in 567.

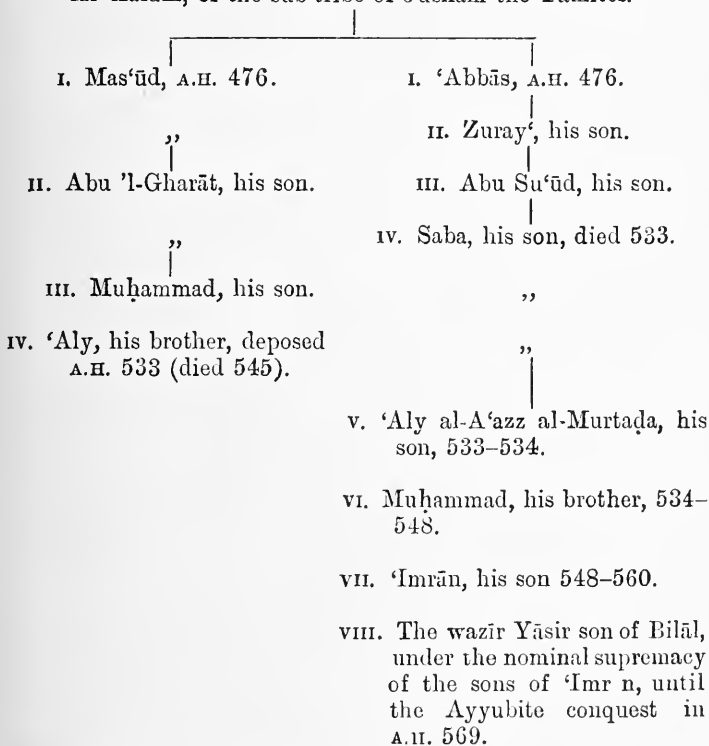

* In the "district of Khadīr" there existed in Hamdāni's days the vestiges of a large and ancient town, Salūḳ, "now known," he says, "under the name of Hābil ar-Raybah, حَبِيلِ الرَّبِيَّةِ." (In Yāḳūt, who copies Hamdāni, the name is written حَسَلِ الزَّيْنَةِ.) Among its remains, adds Hamdāni, iron scoriæ, fragments of gold and silver and coins are found. Šalūḳīyah armour and dogs, he further says, were so named, after the Yamanite city. This last statement, though in accordance with the commonly received definition, I am disposed to think requires confirmation.

NOTE 113 to p. 161.—Ibn Khaldūn, it will be observed, derives most of his information touching the Zurayite dynasty from Ibn Sa‘īd, who himself is without doubt indebted, directly or indirectly, to ‘Omārah. But Ibn Khaldūn seems to be misled by the ambiguity of language, be it his own or be it borrowed from Ibn Sa‘īd, which he uses when speaking of the rivalry between the two brothers ‘Aly and Muḥammad, sons of Saba. In a genealogical table he appends to the chapter, he evidently confuses ‘Aly al-A‘azz with ‘Aly son of Abi ‘l-Gharāt, and the table is so incorrect that I omit it altogether.

I understand the Hamdanite Princes of Aden to have succeeded one another in accordance with the subjoined list.

The Banu Zuray‘.

Al-Karam, of the sub-tribe of Jusham the Yāmītes.

Of their predecessors, the Banu Ma‘n, we have only a very meagre account. They established their power over Aden, in the days of al-Ma'mūn according to Ibn Khaldūn, or, according to 'Omārah, on the downfall of the Ziyādite dynasty, previous to which time, we are told, Aden was subject to the Banu Ziyād. In about A.H. 454, the Banu Ma'n submitted to 'Aly the Sulayhite, who imposed a tribute upon them which, in A.H. 461, he settled upon his niece and daughter-in-law Sayyidah. Upon 'Aly's death, in A.H. 473, the Banu Ma'n declared their independence, but two or three years later, their country was reconquered by al-Mukarram son of 'Aly. He deposed the family of Ma'n and placed Aden under the joint authority of the two brothers 'Abbās and Mas'ūd sons of al-Karam, who were tribesmen of the Sulayhites, and to whom both 'Aly and his son were indebted for past services.

Our MS. of 'Omārah represents 'Abbās and Mas'ūd as having survived al-Mukarram the Sulayhite, who died in A.H. 484. But, as I have already had occasion to remark, the MS. is, at this particular point, exceedingly corrupt. The statement is, moreover, not confirmed by Khazraji, from which it can only be gathered that the tribute due to Queen Sayyidah was regularly paid until the death of Mas'ūd and Zuray'. Khazraji says that Dumlūwah was conquered by Zuray' in A.H. 480, whence it may be inferred that he had succeeded his father previous to that date.

Zuray' and his uncle Mas'ūd were killed at Zabīd; but the only clue to a date is the fact that the event occurred during the lifetime of al-Mufaḍḍal, who died in A.H. 504.

The dates of the death of Abu Su'ūd and of Abu 'l-Gharāt, under whose reign the payment of tribute finally ceased, are also wanting; but it may perhaps be inferred from what is elsewhere stated by 'Omārah (supra, p. 60), that Abu 'l-Gharāt and Saba son of Abu Su'ūd were both on the throne in 519.

The appointment of Saba as Dā'y was probably in A.H. 525, or A.H. 526. (See Note 102.)

From and after the capture of Aden by Saba in 533, the Banu Zuray' held undivided sway over the principality of Aden.

NOTE 114 to p. 166.—The Banu 'Anz son of Wā'il were a sister tribe to the Banu Bakr and Banu Taghlib, and descendants of Rabī'ah son of Nizār.

NOTE 115 to p. 171.—Ibn Khaldūn makes elsewhere (vol. ii. p. 64) the same statement, and professes to do so on the authority of as-Suhayli,* to the effect, namely, that the ancient name of Ṣan‘ā was Uwāl (or Uwwāl). Two of the MSS. used by Juynboll for his edition of the Marāṣid have likewise the name in that form. It is not therefore through mere inadvertence that the word is so written. But the generality of Arab writers have Azāl, which is identified with the biblical Uzal.

NOTE 116 to p. 172.—The Kharīdat al-Kaṣr wa Jarīdat ahl il-‘aṣr was written by ‘Imād ad-dīn al-Isfahānī, who died in A.H. 597. His life is given by Ibn Khallikān, vol. iii. p. 300, de Slane’s translation. Another book, the Kharīdat al-‘Ajā‘ib has for its author Zayn ad-dīn ‘Omar ibn al-Wardī, who died in A.H. 749.

NOTE 117 to p. 175.—Hamdānī mentions Kutabah (p. 69) as the name of a village or town in the less elevated portion of Sarāt Kudam, and it may have stood on or near a mountain of the same name. The town seems to have been situated not far from Ḥajjah, consequently almost directly south of Ṣa‘dah, and at a considerable distance from it. Manzoni has Qutaba on the road from Aden to Yarīm, which, it is needless to say, cannot be the place here in question. It is probably a name of much more recent date.

NOTE 118 to p. 175.—A sub-tribe of Hamdān may possibly have borne the name of Ḥarāz, but it seems more likely that Ibn Khaldūn is here in error. Al-Hamdānī says, in his Geography of Arabia (p. 105, Müller’s ed.), that the Banu Ḥarāz were a tribe descended from Ḥimyar the elder, and sons of al-Ghauth son of Sa‘d son of ‘Auf son of ‘Ady (son of Mālik son of Zayd al-Jamhūr). See also ‘Omārah, p. 18.

NOTE 119 to p. 179.—Both the Banu ‘Ijl and the Banu Yarbū‘ were Moḍarite tribes. The former, stated by Ibn Khaldūn to have become extinct, were a sister tribe of the Banu Ḥanīfah and descendants, through the Banu Bakr ibn Wā‘il, of Rabī‘ah son of Nizār. The Banu Yarbū‘ were, as stated in the text, derived from the Banu Tamīm, descendants of Tābikhah son of al-Ya's son of Moḍar. But another tribe, of the same name, claimed to be descendants, through the Banu Ḥanīfah, of the Banu Bakr ibn Wā'il, and were therefore closely connected with the Banu 'Ijl. The latter, as well as the Banu Ḥanīfah and other sub-tribes of the Banu Bakr, are mentioned by Hamdāni among the inhabitants of Yamāmah.

Ṭasm and Jadīs, grandsons, or the one grandson and the other great-grandson of Shem, were the ancestors of two great aboriginal tribes of Arabia, and their language is said to have been Arabic.

Saksak, who according to our author was ancestor of the Banu Hizzān, was, as he tells us elsewhere (vol. ii. p. 302), son of Wāthil (or Wā'il) son of Ḥimyar.* But according to other and perhaps preferable authorities (see Hamdāni, p. 162, and Yāqūt, vol. iv. p. 417), the Banu Hizzān of Yamāmah were derived from the Banu 'Anazah, descendants of Rabī'ah son of Nizār, and were consequently of the same stem as the Banu Ḥanīfah, the Banu 'Ijl and, according to what is stated above, as the Banu Yarbū'. The name Hizzān was also borne by the ancestor of an ancient people, descendants of Lāwadh son of Shem. (Ṭabari, vol. i. p. 213; Ibn Khaldūn, vol. ii. p. 7.)

The story of 'Amlīk, or 'Amlūk, and Yamāmah will be found in Mas'ūdi (Barbier de Maynard, vol. iii. p. 276, sqq.). It tells how Ḥassān ibn Tubba', King of the Ḥimyarites, marched at the head of an army against the Jadīsites. The king was warned that a certain woman at Jaww, as it was then still called, possessed such marvellous strength of vision, that she was able to descry a horseman at a distance of three days' journey. He ordered his soldiers each to hew down a tree and to carry it before him. Yamāmah watched the enemy's army and reported that she beheld a forest advancing against them, with a man behind each tree. She was disbelieved, the city was surprised and taken, and the Jadīsites, who had exterminated the Ṭasmītes, in revenge for the tyranny to which they were subjected by the Ṭasmite king 'Amlūk, were now themselves massacred to the last man.†

* The name Hamdān, which occurs in the passage above mentioned, is clearly a misprint for Hizzān.

† Yamāmah's words describing what she first saw, are somewhat more intelligible as given by Yāqūt (iv. 1033) than according to to Ṭabari's and Mas'ūdi's versions.

The story is to be found not only in Mas'ūdi, who wrote in A.D. 944, but it is also told by Ṭabari (i. 771) who died in A.D. 923. And the latter relates it on the authority of Ibn Ishāk, who died in A.H. 151, A.D. 768.

NOTE 120 to p. 180.—The tribe of 'Ad has been mentioned in Note 96. The 'Ādites were, like Ṭasm, Jadis, Thamūd, etc., one of the aboriginal Arab tribes, all of whom have disappeared. The statement in the text, relating to the people conquered by the posterity of Ya'rub, must, I presume, be applied to the second or later 'Ādites, descendants of those members of the tribe who escaped destruction in the days of the prophet Hūd.

Both Ḥaḍramaut and Ya'rub are usually described as sons of Kaḥṭān.

NOTE 121 to p. 182.—Zafār was conquered in A.H. 678 by Sultān al-Muẓaffar, the second king of Yaman of the dynasty of the Banu Rasūl. The Prince of Zafār was at that time Sālīm son of Idrīs, grandson, it is to be presumed, of Aḥmad ibn Muḥammad, the person mentioned in the text, and the founder of a short-lived dynasty. A full account of al-Muẓaffar's conquest is given by Ibn Ḥātim (fol. 100 obv. sqq.). It is also mentioned by al-Janadi (p. 181 obv.), and Khazraji, in his 'Ukūḍ (fol. 115 obv.), follows Ibn Ḥātim.

Khazraji calls the city Zafār al-Ḥamūḍi (الموصى sic). In Ibn Baṭūṭah's travels the name is written ظفار للموصى which his translators have rendered Zhafar aux plantes salines et amères. Zafār al-Ḥamūḍi may be the correct reading, but whether or not, we may infer that the town was named after the founder of the dynasty. In Janadi he is called al-Ḥabūḍi الحوضى (sic) and in al-Ahdal (fol. 260 rev.), who, in his account of the place, simply copies al-Janadi, the word appears as al-Ḥabuṭi الحبوطى. Sprenger (p. 144, 146) has الحبوضى.

In saying that the seaport of Zafār was the seat of the Tubbas, Ibn Khaldūn evidently confuses it with the ancient city of the Ḥimyarites of the same name, which stood south of Ṣan'ā, and of which some traces still exist (see supra, Note 22).

NOTE 122 to p. 183.—The Ka'bah of Najrān is said to have been a Christian church, built by the family of 'Abd al-Madān ibn Dayyān (Rayyān?). of whom mention will be made in a subsequent note (No. 126).

For Kuss ibn Sā'idah, see Mas'ūdi's Golden Meadows (Barbier de Meynard, i. 133). He died towards the commencement of the Prophet's career, and the Tāj al-'Arūs mentions, on the authority of the Lisān al-'Arab, that Kuss ibn Sā'idah was styled Bishop of Najrān.

NOTE 123 to p. 183.—A translation of the story of the sons of Nizār and of the Jurhumite Af'ā of Najrān will be found in Mas'ūdi (Barbier de Meynard, iii. 228).

Mushallal is the name of a place situated between Mecca and Medinah.

The Jurhumites were descended from Jurhum son of Kaḥṭān and brother of Ya'rub. The patriarch Ishmael married a daughter of the tribe, and from them was descended 'Adnān grandfather of Nizār and ancestor of the Ishmaelite or insidious Arabs. Another, a primeval tribe known as the first Jurhumites, is mentioned by Arab writers. They were contemporaries of the 'Ādites, and like them they perished and utterly disappeared. I do not know whence Ibn Khaldūn derives his authority for the name and pedigree given in the text to the Āf'ā, but he mentions both name and pedigree elsewhere likewise (vol. ii. p. 255).

NOTE 124 to p. 183.—Faymiyyūn was a Syrian Christian, but a follower of the true faith afterwards re-established by the Arabian Prophet. Having been captured by a band of wandering Arabs, he was brought to Najrān and there sold into slavery. Through the example of his piety, and through the influence of the miracles he wrought in the name of the true God, the people of Najrān, until then steeped in idolatry, became converted to the faith.* The period at which this occurred is not mentioned, but not long before the birth of the Prophet, the Christians of

* Ṭabari, i. 920, sqq. The inhabitants of Najrān, we are told, worshipped a palm tree, which on certain feast days, they decorated with coloured cloths and with the ornaments of their women. At so late a period as that of the Prophet, the Madhhijites of Najrān appear to have worshipped the idol Yaghūth. See Professor Robertson-Smith's "Kinship," p. 192.

Najrān became victims to the hostility of Dhu Nuwās, the last of the long line of the Tubbas or Himyarite Kings of Yaman. He sought to force them into the acceptance of Judæism, the religion he had himself adopted, and the savage cruelty with which he pursued his design is denounced in the Kur'ān (S. lxxxv.), where he is proclaimed as doomed to the torments of hell. These persecutions of the Christians of Najrān brought about the invasion and conquest of Yaman by the Abyssinians, who were themselves subsequently expelled by the Persians.

The Arab traditions on the proficiency acquired by the people of Najrān in the practice of supernatural arts, may serve to show that long before the rise of Islām, the Christian inhabitants of that province had made considerable progress in civilization.

It will be noticed that they are spoken of in our text as having themselves held the Jewish faith in early days. Ṭabari mentions that when Baruch fulfilled his mission to Bukht Naṣṣar (supra, Note 3), he came from Najrān.

NOTE 125 to p. 184.—Abu 'Omar Yūsuf ibn 'Abd al-Barr, a famous traditionist, was a native of Cordova and died in A.H. 463. His life is included in the biographies of Ibn Khallikān (de Slanc, iv. p. 398).

It may be remarked that (in vol. ii. p. 256), Ibn Khaldūn himself omits the name of Yazīd and substitutes that of his brother 'Abd al-Ḥajr son of 'Abd al-Madān. In his biography of the Prophet (p. 53) he, however, follows the narrative of Ṭabari.

NOTE 126 to p. 184.—Ibn Khaldūn repeats in vol. ii. p. 255, that a portion of the Azdites remained in Najrān and shared the authority of the Madhhijites over the country; but he makes there no mention of the Banu 'l-Ḥārith ibn Ka'b of the tribe of Azd. Al-Mas'ūdi tells us (Barbier de Meynard, iii. 390) that the Azdites in Najrān were absorbed in the tribe of Madhhij, a statement which seems more probable than that quoted in our text from Ibn Ḥazm. The chieftainship seems to have remained permanently in the hands of the Banu Ḥārith the Madhhijites. It passed on to a family of that tribe, known as the Banu Dayyān (or Rayyān?), descendants of Yazīd surnamed Dayyān. His son was 'Abd al-Madān, mentioned in the text and in Note 122, father (ancestor?) of Yazīd son of 'Abd al-Madān, who was converted to Islām. Ibn Khaldūn proceeds with a quotation from Ibn Sa'īd, to the effect that in the sixth century, supreme power was held by 'Abd al-Ḳays of the family of Abu 'l-Jūd descendant of 'Abd al-Madān. He says in our text, probably on the same authority, that 'Abd al-Ḳays was deposed by Ibn Mahdy, but it will be observed that there is no mention of him in our copy of 'Omārah, nor is Najrān mentioned as one of the places over which Ibn Mahdy ever exercised authority. I must add that I know of no other instance in which the name 'Abd al-Ḳays was borne by any person in Muḥammadan times.

NOTE 127 to p. 185.—I have nowhere found confirmation of Ibn Khaldūn's statement that al-Ḳāsim fled to India and died there. Al-Khazraji says (p. 291) that certain Yamanites, on the appearance of the Karmathians in their country, proceeded to the Mountain of Rass at Medinah, in A.H. 284, and raised to supreme authority the Imām al-Hādy Yahya son of Ḥusayn son of al-Ḳāsim, who, with their assistance, conquered the country between Ṣa'dah and Ṣan'ā. Al-Abdal tells us (fol. 12 rev.) that al-Ḳāsim died at ar-Rass, leaving two sons, Muḥammad and Ḥusayn.

The Zaydite MSS. recently acquired by the library of the British Museum, give a fairly consistent account of the life of al-Ḳāsim, the ancestor of the long line of Imāms of Yaman. According to the Ḥadā'iq al-Wardiyah (Or. 3786 and 3813), when Muḥammad son of Ibrahim Ṭabātabā died in A.H. 199, his brother al-Ḳāsim was in Egypt. He remained there about ten years, living in a state of obscurity and in concealment, but recognized as the successor of his brother by the Alides, who sent him emissaries from all parts of the empire, from Mecca and from Medinah, from Kūfah, from Rayy and from Kazwīn.

When 'Abd Allah ibn Ṭāhir was appointed to the Government of Egypt (in A.H. 211 according to Maḳrīzī, in A.H. 210 or 211 according to Ibn al-Athīr), the new Governor adopted measures for the arrest of al-Ḳāsim.* The latter contrived, however, to make his escape from Egypt and to reach Ḥijāz. There he sought refuge with an Arab tribe, among whom he lived concealed, throughout the reign of al-Ma'mūn and of his immediate successors. The lapse of years brought about a relaxation of the enmity with which he had been so long pursued, and towards the end of his life al-Ḳāsim purchased a property, named ar-Rass, situated near Dhu Ḥulayfah "on the further side of Jabal al-Aswād."* Here he built himself a house, in which he died in A.H. 246.

The successor of al-Ḳāsim to the Imāmate was, according to the author of the Yawaḳīt, Muḥammad son of al-Ḳāsim, descendant of 'Aly Zayn al-'Ābidīn and of Ḥusayn brother of Ḥasan. As Muḥammad is generally admitted to have disappeared in A.H. 219, the introduction of his name seems an anachronism, but the case is not exceptional.

Of Ḥusayn and Muḥammad, the two sons of al-Ḳāsim the Rassite, no record seems to have been preserved.†

Yaḥya son of Ḥusayn, who afterwards assumed the title al-Hādī ila 'l-Haqq, the Leader unto Truth, was born a year before the death of his grandfather. Al-Hādī asserted his claim to the Imāmate in A.H. 280 and proceeded to Ṣa'dah, where he used his influence to put an end to the strife with which the city was distracted. But he was soon compelled to abandon his task and to return to the Ḥijāz. Early in 284, he received invitations from the citizens to place himself at their head, and accordingly, in Ṣafar of that year, he re-appeared at Ṣa'dah accompanied by his uncle Muḥammad. He conquered Najrān, and was next engaged in warfare with the Karmathians. The Zaydite author of the Hadā'ik is silent over most of the particulars given by al-Khazraji (supra, Note 8) as well as by the author of the History of the Karmathians in Yaman, but he mentions that al-Hādī sent his son Muḥammad al-Murtaḍa to assist the people of Ṣan'ā against the Ismailites, to which he adds that the Imām became master of Yaman. Al-Hādī died at Ṣa'dah in Dhu 'l-Hijjah 298, of poison it is said. He left three sons, Abu 'l-Ḳāsim Muḥammad al-Murtaḍa, Aḥmad surnamed an-Nāṣir and Ḥasan.

* Dhu Ḥulayfah is described by Yāḳūt as a village situated six or seven miles from Medinah and as the Miḳāt (see Note 16) of the people of that city.

† The names of other sons are mentioned by genealogists, and there seems little doubt that certain descendants of al-Ḳāsim settled in Egypt. See the Tāj al-'Arūs, s.v. Rass, and cf. Ibn Khallikān (de Slane), vols. i. 115 and ii. 46.

The next Imām of the Zaydites, it is stated, was Ḥasan ibn ‘Alī surnamed an-Nāṣir lil-Ḥaḳḳ, but better known in history as al-Uṭrūsh. He arose in Persia in A.H. 301, and died at Āmul in Ṭabaristān in 304.

But we are also told that next in succession to al-Hādy was his son Muḥammad al-Murtaḍa. He succeeded upon the death of his father, and abdicated in 301 in favour of his brother Aḥmad an-Nāṣir. This leaves no room for al-Uṭrūsh. The author of the Yawaḳīt, on the other hand, tells us that the Imāmate of both the sons of al-Hādy is disputed. Al-Murtaḍa died at Ṣa‘dah in A.H. 310.

Aḥmad an-Nāṣir li-dīn Illāh was chiefly engaged in wars with the Karmathians of Maswar, whose ruler, it is stated, was ‘Abd al-Ḥamīd son of Muḥammad son of al-Ḥajjāj.* A battle is said to have been fought in Sha‘bān 307, in which the Karmathians were utterly defeated, but ‘Abd al-Ḥamīd succeeded in making his escape. Aḥmad an-Nāṣir died, according to the author of the Ḥadā’iḳ, in A.H. 325.

For the subsequent Imāms down to the middle of the seventh century of the Hijrah, I may content myself with referring the reader to the Genealogical Table, Note 107, and to Note 130.

I must add that I have not been able to identify the writer Ibn al-Mujāb, mentioned by Ibn Khaldūn.

NOTE 128 to p. 186.—Abū Bakr Muḥammad ibn Yaḥya as-Ṣūlī died in A.H. 335. His life is given by Ibn Khallikān (de Slane, vol. iii. p. 68). He was a voluminous writer, and it will be noticed that among his works was a History of the Karmathians. He is doubtless the author quoted by adh-Dhahabi, as reproduced by Prof. de Goeje in his “Histoire des Carmathes” (p. 35).

NOTE 129 to p. 188.—Kamāl ad-dīn ‘Omar ibn ‘Abd al-‘Azīz, surnamed Ibn al-‘Adīm, was author of an important work in ten volumes on the history of Aleppo, entitled Buḡhyat at-Ṭalab fi tarīkh Halab, a title which may be translated “Object of the Student’s furthest desires in respect to the History of Aleppo.” He afterwards wrote an abridgment of the work, to which he gave the name Zubdat al-Halab, a portion of which has been published by Freytag. Ibn al-'Adīm was born in A.H. 580 and died in 660.

NOTE 130 to p. 190.—Ibn Khaldūn's chapter on the Rassite Imāms is so incorrect that I have felt inclined to omit it altogether. But I have eventually thought that a more useful purpose may be gained by allowing it to form part of this volume, and by pointing out its inaccuracies. Touching the Suleymanite Sharīfs of Yaman, it will be sufficient to refer to what I have said in Note 88.

I have there pointed out Ibn Khaldūn's error in respect to the Imām Aḥmad (al-Mutawakkil) son of Suleymān, whom he erroneously calls son of Ḥamzah, and of whom he still more inaccurately says, that he was nearly related to the Suleymanite Ghānim ibn Yahya. The Imām in question was in point of fact a direct descendant of an-Nāṣir Aḥmad son of al-Hādy Yahya. 'Omārah is therefore right in styling him the Rassite. (See the Genealogical Table to Note 107.)

AḤMAD AL-MUTAWAKKIL 'AL' ALLAH issued his proclamations asserting his claims to the Imāmate in A.H. 532, and was recognized in Najrān as well as at Ṣa'dah. With the assistance of the neighbouring Arab tribes, he attacked and defeated the Hamdānite King of Ṣan'ā, Hātīm ibn Aḥmad, in A.H. 545. In 549, he marched against the Karmathian tribe of Yām, who, if the Zaydite historians are to be believed, still persisted in the practices described in Janadi's account of the sect (supra, pp. 199 and 203). The country was plundered and laid utterly waste by the Imām's troops, the remnant of the population seeking refuge in Najrān. His expedition to Zabīd took place in A.H. 552. The account of it given by the Zaydite writers differs materially from 'Omārah's. The Prince of Zabīd, Fātik son of Muḥammad, was, they say, a man of unparalleled wickedness and addicted to unnatural crimes. He fell into the hands of the Imām, who, refusing an enormous ransom, ordered his prisoner to be put to death in obedience to the Divine law. The Imām remained eight days at Zabīd. He appointed a governor over the city and departed victorious and triumphant. He continued to wage war in defence of the faith and his fame spread abroad. The Khutbah was recited in his name in Khaybar and at Yanbu'. He reigned thirty-three years. Towards the latter end of his life he became blind, and he died in A.H. 566.

AL-MANŞŪR BILLAH 'ABD ALLAH was likewise a member of the Rassite family, descendant of Ḥamzah (son of the Imām Abu Ḥāshim al-Ḥasan) and of 'Abd Allah grandson of al-Kāsim the Rassite (see the Genealogical Table, Note 107). He was born in A.H. 561, proclaimed himself Imām in 593, and was solemnly recognized in the following year. He took up his residence for a time at Ṣa'dah, then moved southwards, and in 594 or beginning of 595, he entered Ṣan'ā, where the citizens submitted to his rule. In 595 he made himself master of Dhamār and its neighbourhood, but was soon compelled to relinquish his conquests and to retreat northward.* He nevertheless continued to increase in power and reputation, which not only extended into the Ḥijāz, but his authority as Imām was formally recognized by the Zaydites of Persia. In A.H. 600 he restored and strengthened the fortress of Zafār. In 611 he regained possession of Ṣan'ā and Dhamār and occupied himself in subjecting the Muṭarrifīyah, whom, according to his own historians, he treated with great cruelty.†

At the instigation of the Abbaside Khalifah an-Nāṣir, a strong force was sent, in A.H. 612, against al-Manşūr by al-Mas'ūd, the last Ayyubite Sultān of Yaman. The Imām retreated to the neighbourhood of Kaukabān and intrenched himself in a strong position, where he built a substantial house for himself and quarters for his followers, and where he also set up a mint. That position he occupied for three months and a half, during which time frequent engagements took place between his troops and their enemies. In 613 a truce was agreed upon. The Imām removed to Kaukabān and then to Zafār. His health now gave way, and he died at the former place in the first month of A.H. 614.

The death of al-Manşūr billah was followed by a division in the ranks of the Zaydites. The people of Ṣa'dah and its neighbourhood recognized as Imām the Sharif Majd (or Najm) ad-dīn Yahya ibn al-Muḥsin (read Muḥammad),* who adopted the surname of al-Hādī ila 'l-Haḳḳ, the same as that of his namesake and ancestor, the originator of the dynasty. In the southern districts, 'Izz ad-dīn Muḥammad, surnamed an-Nāṣir li-dīn Illah, son of al-Manṣūr 'Abd Allah, was proclaimed Imām. He was defeated, in A.H. 623, in an engagement near Ṣan'ā with the troops of the Ayyubite King al-Mas'ūd. He fled to Thula, wounded by an arrow in the eye, and died before the end of the year. He was succeeded by his brother Shams ad-dīn Aḥmad, al-Mutawakkil 'al' Allah. Al-Manṣūr 'Abd Allah, it must be stated, left a large family of sons besides the two I have here mentioned.

* Ibn al-Athīr mentions in his Chronicles (vol. xii. 113) the defeat of al-Manşūr 'Abd Allah by the Ayyubite Sultān al-Mu'izz Isma'il, and the date he gives is A.H. 597, not 592 as in our text of Ibn Khaldūn.

† The word المطرفية frequently occurs in the Zaydite histories. I have nowhere met with an explanation, but it seems to be a designation for the Sunnite Muslims and is very generally accompanied by the epithet shakīyah, the vile.

THE IMAM AḤMAD IBN ḤUSAYN (ibn Aḥmad ibn al-Ḳāsim), surnamed al-Mahdi, was proclaimed at Thula in A.H. 646. On the question of his descent there is a singular disagreement between the writers I have had the means of consulting, a thing all the more strange considering the importance attached by the Zaydites to the purity of their Imām's pedigree. Al-Ahdal makes Aḥmad ibn Ḥusayn great grandson of Ḳāsim (Abu 'l-Ḳāsim al Ḥusayn?) son of al-Mu'ayyad Aḥmad (one of the Persian Imāms), descendant of Zayd son of Ḥasan and consequently not a member of the Rassite family.† The author of the Yawāqūt identifies his great-grandfather with al-Manṣūr al-Ḳāsim, who died in A.H. 393, and among whose children no son of the name of Aḥmad has been mentioned. The author of the Bughyat al-Murīd says that he was descendant, as well as Mālikah the mother of the Imām Aḥmad ibn Suleymān, of Aḥmad son of Isma'īl Abu 'l-Barakāt, descendant of Muḥammad son of al-Ḳāsim the Rassite. This agrees with what is said by the author of the Jawāhir, who, however, confines himself to the statement that the Imām's great-grandfather al-Ḳāsim was descended from Muḥammad son of al-Ḳāsim the Rassite. On the other hand, a comparison of dates—the Imām Aḥmad ibn Suleymān having been born in A.H. 500—leaves the question in a doubtful condition.

The designation al-Mūti I find nowhere but in Ibn

Aḥmad ibn al-Ḥusayn was raised to the Imāmate with the full consent and approval of the family of al-Manṣūr ‘Abd Allah. Ere long he was able to treat on terms of equality with the Rasūlite Sultān, at that time al-Muzaffar Yūsuf. Such a state of things was necessarily most distasteful, not only to the Sultān, but to all orthodox Muslims. Khazraji tells us, in his ‘Uḳūd, that the Abbaside Khalīfah al-Musta‘ṣim sent the Sultān orders to put an end to the dominion of the heretical Imām. The Zaydite historians relate a different and a somewhat curious story. According to their version (Yawaḳīt, fol. 171 rev.), al-Muzaffar asked assistance of al-Musta‘ṣim against the Imām. The Khalīfah, it is related, sent the Sultān certain Ḥashshiyīn, otherwise called, he continues, Fidāwiyīn. These are persons, he further explains, “who sell themselves and risk their lives in accomplishing the slaughter of a person whose death is required of them.” † It is not without interest to observe that the word Ḥashshiyīn (or Ḥashshiyūn) is the same as that found by Mr. Lane (“Thousand and One Nights,” Note 46 to ch. ii.) in Idrīsī’s Geography, applied to the people we call the Assassins. The word, as Mr. Lane remarks, is precisely synonymous with Ḥashshāshīn. The latter is the form in common use at the present day, though it now simply signifies persons addicted to the use of the drug.

Sultān al-Muzaffar sent the assassins on a pretended mission to the Imām. They were received in audience, and very nearly succeeded in effecting their purpose. The Imām was wounded by the dagger of his assailant, but was rescued from the struggle by his attendants. ‡

Ere long the Imām was beset with more serious trouble. The fidelity of the family of al-Manṣūr to their oaths of allegiance did not long endure. The distribution of commands brought about jealousy and dissensions, not only on their part, but also on that of other powerful chiefs. Denunciations were launched against the Imām, of whom it was declared that he was devoid of the qualities required by Divine law for his sacred office. The people were called upon to transfer their allegiance to the Sharīf Ḥasan ibn Wahhās. Certain acts of extortion committed by order of the Imām Aḥmad ibn Ḥusayn filled up the measure of his unpopularity. The malcontents called upon Shams ad-dīn Aḥmad (al-Mutawakkil), chief of the Ḥamzites and son of the Imām al-Manṣūr ‘Abd Allah, to place himself at their head. They received support and assistance from the Rasūlite king of Yaman. The rival forces met at Shuwābah in A.H. 656.* The Imām’s troops were defeated and fled, leaving him almost alone on the field of battle. Surrounded by a band of his enemies, he was overpowered and killed, and his head carried to the tent of Shams ad-dīn. The event is said to have occurred on the identical day upon which the last Abbaside Khalīfah of Baghdad was put to death by Hulaku. The Sharīf Abu Muḥammad al-Ḥasan ibn Wahhās was proclaimed Imām, but was not universally acknowledged.

† See supra, Note 55.

‡ We are told by the same writer (fol. 166 obv.) that the Persian Imām Abu ‘l-Ḥasan ‘Alī al-Ḥādī al-Ḥaḳaynī, who pursued the Ismailites with his enmity, was murdered in A.H. 440 by a Hashishy, sent for the purpose from the castle of Almūt.

For about two years before that time, the country had been devastated by famine, which now resulted in pestilence. Among its earliest victims was Shams ad-dīn Aḥmad, and he was followed, before the end of the year, by two other sons of al-Manṣūr ‘Abd Allah, Najm ad-dīn Musa and Hasan. The chieftainship over the Ḥamzites consequently devolved upon their brother, Ṣārim ad-dīn Da-ūd, son of the Imām al-Manṣūr ‘Abd Allah.

During the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries the Imāmate of Yaman was held by a family descended from al-Manṣūr al-Kāsim son of Muḥammad son of ‘Aly al-Amlaḥi, a descendant of Yūsuf ad-Dā’y great-grandson of

* For Shuwābah see supra, Note 6 (footnote). The author of the Jawāhir says that it stood east of Zafār; Yāḳūt, that it was at a distance of four miles from Ṣan‘ā (elsewhere he says four parasangs) on the banks of the river Darawān, which he tells us, flowed between Shuwābah and a town named after the river. The distance from Ṣan‘ā, as will be seen, must have been considerably more than even four parasangs. Yāḳūt adds a strange account of the savage and desolate nature of the country. No bird, he says, will pass over it, and the bed of the river, he continues, is strewn with stones resembling the fangs of a dog.

al-Hādy Yahya, the founder, as has been seen, of the Rassite dynasty.

Manṣūr al-Ḳāsim was born in A.H. 967 and died in A.H. 1029 (A.D. 1620), after a reign of twenty-three years. He is the Imām "Khassem ibn Mohamed" spoken of by Niebuhr as ancestor of al-Mahdi 'Abbās, the reigning Imām of Yaman at the time of the traveller's visit to Ṣan'ā in A.D. 1763. Niebuhr prints in his Description de l'Arabie a genealogical table giving the names and tracing the descent, from al-Ḳāsim, of the Imāms who successively occupied the throne down to the accession of al-Mahdi 'Abbās. The Bughyat al-Murīd contains a minute account of the numerous descendants of al-Ḳāsim, the effect of which is to show that Niebuhr's table requires correction. Thus, al-Ḳāsim was succeeded, according to the Bughyat, not by his son Isma'īl, but by his eldest son, al-Mu'ayyad Muḥammad, born in A.H. 990, and who reigned from A.H. 1029 until his death in A.H. 1054, twenty-five years. His successor was his brother Isma'īl al-Mutawakkil, who died in A.H. 1087 (A.D. 1676), aged sixty-six years.* The life of the Imām al-Manṣūr al-Ḳāsim forms the subject of a MS. in the British Museum library, Or. 3329.

The biography of an earlier Imām, al-Mutawakkil 'al' Allah Yahya, will be found in one of the Zaydite MSS. (Or. 3731). Al-Mutawakkil, who died in A.H. 965 (A.D. 1558), likewise claimed to be a descendant of Yūsuf the Dā'y, but the line of descent is separate and distinct from that of al-Ḳāsim.

NOTE 131 to p. 191.—Some words are, I think, here omitted in the text, but the general sense of the passage is sufficiently obvious.

There is some difficulty in arriving at the correct names of the two personages who play so important a part in the history of the Karmathians, or Ismailites, in Yaman. Ibn Faḍl is called Muḥammad by Ibn Khaldūn, so also by Ibn al-Āthīr, and probably therefore by other writers whose works I have not within reach. On the other hand, he is called 'Aly not only by 'Omārah, but also by Janadi, Khazraji, etc., by Mas'ūdi and by the author of the Dastūr al-Munajjimīn, whom I have already had occasion to mention (supra, Note 26). See also the footnote to the printed edition of Tabari, iii. p. 2256.

* The year of al-Ḳāsim's birth is recorded in a chronogram

In the case of his companion, the discrepancies between the different names attributed to him are even greater. But in styling him Manṣūr, as if it were a proper name, Janadi and Khazraji have allowed themselves to be led into error, through the fact that the Ismailite emissary was known by the designation Manṣūr al-Yaman, he, that is to say, who was endowed with divine assistance in Yaman, meaning further, he who was victorious or who triumphed in Yaman. Khazraji gives him the name of Manṣūr son of Ḥusayn.

The author of the Dastūr calls him Abu 'l-Kāsim (see supra, p. 193), al-Faraj ibn Ḥasan ibn Ḥaushab ibn Zadān al-Kūfi (native of Kūfa). In Maḥrizi (vol. i. p. 349) we read Abu 'l-Kāsim al-Ḥusayn ibn Faraj ibn Ḥaushab al-Kūfi; in Ibn 'l-Athīr (vol. viii. p. 22), Rustam ibn al-Ḥusayn (or al-Ḥasan) ibn Ḥaushab ibn Dadhān an-Najjār. The difference between the two last mentioned is somewhat singular, seeing that a comparison of the two passages relating to Ibn Ḥaushab clearly shows that both writers have borrowed, whether directly or indirectly, from one and the same source. In Maḥrizi, it may be remarked, the word kharraba, to ruin or devastate, has been wrongly substituted for ḥaratha, to plough, with the result of destroying the sense of the phrase.

NOTE 132 to p. 191.—There is here a divergence between the statements of al-Janadi and Khazraji touching the pedigree of Ibn Faḍl, all the more noticeable, since both evidently derive their accounts of the Karmathians in Yaman from the same origin, that is to say, from Ibn Mālik, the writer mentioned in the text.

In Khazraji there is no mention of Dhu Jadan. Ibn al-Athīr, it deserves perhaps to be noticed, says that Ibn Faḍl was member of a family, natives of al-Janad. Al-Khazraji simply says that Ibn Faḍl was descendant of "Khanfar son of Saba son of Ṣafi (Ṣayfi?) son of Zur'ah (Ḥimyar the younger) son of Saba the younger."

The tribe or family of Khanfar is mentioned by al-Hamdāni (p. 204, l. 10), and elsewhere (p. 53, l. 19) the same writer tells us that Khanfar was the name of a town in Abyan.

NOTE 133 to p. 192.—It is of course altogether out of the question to suppose that Ibn Ḥaushab and Ibn Faḍl were sent to Yaman by Maymūn, or that ‘Obayd Allah the Mahdy was his son.

‘Abd Allah son of Maymūn, the real author of the Ismailite conspiracy, was perhaps still living when the two emissaries were despatched; but Prof. de Goeje shows that it was doubtless Abdallah’s son Aḥmad who organized the mission to Yaman.

‘Obayd Allah must at that time have been in his childhood. He died in A.H. 322, at the age, according to Ibn al-Athīr, of sixty-three years.

NOTE 134 to p. 193.—These words are founded upon a traditionary saying of the Prophet. It is cited in both the works of Khazraji preserved in the Leiden Library, and also in the book by ar-Rāzi at the British Museum.

NOTE 135 to p. 194.—Al-Khazraji here adds that Ibn Ḥaushab and Ibn Faḍl arrived in Yaman shortly after the assassination of Muḥammad ibn Ya‘fur, an event which we have been told by al-Janadi, on the authority of Ibn al-Jauzi, occurred in the first month of A.H. 279 (supra, Note 8, p. 225).

Prof. de Goeje arrives at the conclusion that the Ismailite mission was sent to Yaman in A.H. 266, a date in accord with Maḥrizi and with the author of the Dastūr. The latter states that the two missionaries were despatched in 266, whilst both agree in saying that they arrived in Yaman in 268 and that the Ismailite supremacy began to be freely preached in 270.

It would follow that Ibn Faḍl’s final conquest of Ṣan‘ā (see Note 138) must have occurred thirty-one years and Ibn Ḥaushab’s death (A.H. 302) thirty-four years after their arrival in the country. It would in fact appear that they laboured for many long years, before they gained the commanding position which they eventually held for a brief period.

NOTE 136 to p. 196.—It will be noticed that Abu ‘Abd Allah is here represented as having been sent to Africa by Maymūn, or as it may be understood, by the ruling chief of the Ismailites at that period, and not by Ibn Ḥaushab as is stated by other writers. But it is probably true that some time previous to his mission, Abu 'Abd Allah was absent from his native country, that he had an interview with the "grand master" (de Goeje, p. 19, footnote), and that he returned thereafter to Yaman.

As regards the question of the date at which his mission to Africa occurred, the year 290 is to be found in Khazraji as in our text. Maḳrīzi says (vol. i. p. 350) that Abu 'Abd Allah arrived in the country of Katāmah in A.H. 288. In Ibn al-Athīr we read 280, the date adopted by de Sacy, on the authority of Baybars al-Manṣūry and of Abu 'l-Fada. According to Ibn al-Athīr, not only was Abu 'Abd Allah in North Africa before the death (at the latter end of A.H. 289) of Ibrahīm ibn Aḥmad the Aghlabite, but it would further appear that he had previous to that event acquired sufficient power in the country, to enable him to enter into a state of open warfare with the troops of Ibrahīm. (Ibn al-Athīr, vol. viii. pp. 25, 26.) The author of the Dastūr cannot be accepted as a safe guide, but it is not without interest to notice that, although he explicitly mentions the totally inadmissible year 296 as that of Abu 'Abd Allah's arrival, he does so immediately after mentioning figures, $145 + 135$ ($245 + 35$?) which gives us the date of A.H. 280.

The year 296, mentioned in our text as that in which 'Obayd Allah started for North Africa, must be wrong. Our author is, it is true, by no means singular in his error, but Professor de Goeje shows that 'Obayd Allah's departure from Syria occurred, in all probability, not later than A.H. 287 or 288.

A statement by the author of the Dastūr may be noted, to the effect that when 'Obayd Allah arrived in Egypt he intended proceeding to Yaman, that he was deterred by news of the insubordination of Ibn al-Faḍl, and that he remained in concealment in Egypt until he departed for North Africa.

NOTE 137 to p. 199.—Professor de Goeje has reproduced these verses from Khazraji. Two lines are added, expressive of the indignation they aroused in the mind of the orthodox Muslim who has preserved them. The two lines are of the same character as the following, interpolated by Dayba', immediately after the passage in which the supposed new Prophet is represented as proclaiming the abolition of prayer and of fasting:—

لعنه الله في كل بلدة و اخزاه الله في كل مذهب

May God curse him in every land.—May God abase him whithersoever he go (or among the followers of all religions).

NOTE 138 to p. 199.—According to Khazraji, Ibn Faḍl first obtained possession of Ṣan'ā in 293, a statement which is indeed confirmed by Ṭabari (vol. iii. pp. 2256 and 2267), and by Ibn al-Athīr (vii. p. 378). Al-Khazraji's narrative (pp. 34, 35) is to the effect that Dhamār having been seized by the Karmathians, As'ad ibn Ya'fur tendered his submission, but that he fled upon Ibn Faḍl making his entry into Ṣan'ā. The citizens applied for aid to the Zaydite Imām of Ṣa'dah, al-Hādi Yahya, who despatched against their enemies an army under the command of his son Abu 'l-Kāsim Muḥammad al-Murtaḍa. They gained possession of Dhamār and compelled the Karmathians to abandon Ṣan'ā. But the latter recaptured Dhamār from the hands of al-Murtaḍa in A.H. 294, and drove him to seek refuge at Ṣan'ā, where he joined his father. Al-Hādi was now attacked by the troops of As'ad ibn Ya'fur and, the citizens of Ṣan'ā refusing to support the Imām against their old masters, he abandoned the city and retreated to Ṣa'dah. The Karmathians again regained possession of the city for a short period, until they were for a second time expelled with the assistance of al-Hādi. But again the latter was put to flight by the approach of a strong force of the enemy. Al-Hādi died in 298. The Banu Ya'fur once more succeeded in wresting the city from the hands of the Karmathians, but they were themselves soon again driven forth, and Ibn Faḍl, in Ramaḍān 299, made his entry into Ṣan'ā, which remained thenceforth under his dominion, until the termination of his career.

NOTE 139 to p. 201.—These two words have a truly ghastly signification. They are derived from the verbs daḥaṣa, to agitate one's limbs in the agonies of death, and shakhaṣa, to fix one's eyes in the stare of death. Al-Khazraji calls the place al-Mashāḥīṭ, from shaḥaṭa, to welter in blood. Müller's Hamḍāni mentions al-Malāḥīz, situated on the banks of the river Zabīd (p. 71, l. 17, and 100, l. 21).

Ḥuṣayb, pronounced like Zubayr, is the name of the river (or valley) of Zabīd. It has an excellent climate, and its women are distinguished for their surpassing beauty and for their grace and kindness. Hence the well-known saying: "On entering the town of Ḥuṣayb put your beasts to the trot"—meaning, hasten your pace lest you fall a victim to the women's fascinations.

See also Hamdāni, p. 53, l. 24, and 119, l. 17.

NOTE 141 to p. 202.—Abu Sa'īd al-Jannābi was chief of the Karmathian Principality of Baḥrayn. He died in A.H. 301, and throughout his life remained faithful in his allegiance to 'Obayd Allah. I do not know how to explain the allusion in the text to his having declared his independence of the Mahdy, excepting by the fact that his fidelity seems at one time to have been suspected. See de Goeje's Carmathes, p. 69.

NOTE 142 to p. 211.—Egypt was conquered by Jauhar, the Fatimite general, and the foundations of the fortress of al-Kāhirah (Cairo) were laid, in A.H. 358. Al-Mu'izz arrived in Egypt and established the seat of the Fatimite Empire at Cairo in A.H. 362.

NOTE 143 to p. 211.—Dayba' adds here that Ibn al-Asad exercised the office of Dā'y under the reigns of the Fatimite Khalifahs al-Ḥākim and aḏ-Zāhir (A.H. 411-427), and during the earlier years of al-Mustanṣir (A.H. 427-487).

NOTE 144 to p. 212.—Instead of al-Aḥrāj or Aḥrāj, I think we must read al-Akhrāj, which, Hamdāni tells us (p. 106), adjoins the lower country of Ḥaḍūr and was in his day the dwelling-place of the Banu Ṣulayḥi, the Hamdānites. See Dr. Glaser, pp. 38 and 10. He identifies the district with the modern Ḥujrah, shown upon his map, east of Ḥarāz. The place is mentioned, I may add, by al-Mukaddasy, who, according to Professor de Goeje's edition, writes Ukhrāj.

ابن جرير و كان عنوان كذب ابن فضل الى أسعد بن يعفر من باسط
الارض و داحييا و منزلزل الجبال و مرسيا علي بن الفضل الى عبده
أسعد و كفى بهذا الكلام دليلا على كفره فنسئل الله العصمة و فى اثناء
نيابة أسعد له قدم رجل غريب يزعم انه شريف بغدادى فصحب
أسعد و أنس به و قيل ان قدومه كان بارسال من صاحب بغداد لما
بلغه من تقوّم ابن فضل ليعمل الحيلة فى قتله فلبث عند أسعد مدّة
و كان جرائحيا ماهرا بصناعة الادوية بصيرا بفتح العروق و مداواة الاجرحه
و سقى الاشربة الذافعة و لما شدّ خوف أسعد لابن فضل قال انى
عزمت ان اهب نفسى لله و تصدّقا على المسلمين لاريحهم من
هذا الطاغية فعاهدنى ان انا عدت اليك على تقاسمنى ما يصير
اليك من الملك فاجابه أسعد الى ما سأل فتجهّز الغريب و خرج
من عند أسعد و هو اذذاك مقيم بالجوف ببلد همدان على تخوّف
من ابن فضل فسار الغريب حتى قدم المذيخرة فحاط وجوه الدولة
و كبرآعها و فتح لهم العروق و سقاها الادوية الذافعة و اعطاهم المعجونات
فرفعوا ذكره الى ابن فضل و اتنوا عليه عنده و وصفوه بما فيه من
الصنعة و قيل له انه لا يصلح الا لمثلك فلما كان ذات يوم احب
الافتصان فبحث عنه و طلبه فجى له به و حين وصله الطالب عمد
الى سمّ فعله بشعرة فى مقدم راسه و كان ذى شعر كثير ثم لما دخل
عليه أمره ان يتجرد من ثيابه و يابس غيرها من ثياب كانت عند
ابن فضل ثم أمره بالدنو منه ليفصده ففعل و قعد بين يديه ثم أخرج
المنصد و امتصه تبرّبةً له من السمّ ثم مسح برأسه فى موضع السمّ
فعلق منه بعض شيء ثم فصده بالاكل و ربطه و خرج من فورة

ابن فضل طوّقه بطوق من ذهب و انهمك فى المذيخرة على تحليل
 محرّمات الشريعة و اباحة محظوراتها و عمل بها دارا واسعة يجمع فيها
 غالب أهل مذهبه نساء و رجالا متزوّجين متطيّبين و يوقد بينهم
 الشمع ساعة و يتكادّون فيها باطيب الحديث و اطربه ثم يطفى
 الشمع و يضع كل منهم يده على امراة فلا يترك الوقوع عليها و ان

 ذهنى و كان ابن فضل لما طابت له المذيخرة و جعلها دار اقامته
 استناب على صنعاء أسعد بن يعفر المقدم ذكره استنابه مكانه لانه لم
 يثبت ان أسعد اجتمع به بل كان حذرا من غدره فاقام أسعد بصنعاء
 نائبا له و هو يودّ ان يأخذ بثار المسلمين منه و هو ايضا حذر منتعص
 و كان لا يكاد يستقرّ بصنعاء خشية غازية من ابن فضل او هجمة قال

 المتوكل عند ما بويح للموطى بالامامة فى تلا لانهم كانوا ينتظرون
 استكمال سنة فلما بويح الموطى بايعوه و لما غلبهم على صعدة نزل
 له أحمد المتوكل امامهم و بايع له و أمنه و ذلك سنة تسع و أربعين
 ثم حج سنة خمسين و بقى أمر الزيدية بصعدة فى عقب الموطى
 هذا و سمعت بمصر أن الامام بصعدة كان قبل الثمانين و السبعمائة
 على بن محمد من اعقابهم و توفى قبل الثمانين و ولى ابنه صلاح
 و بايعه الزيدية و كان بعضهم يقول ليس هو بامام لعدم شروط الامامة
 فيقول هو انا لكم ما شئتم امام أو سلطان ثم مات صلاح آخر سنة
 ثلاث و تسعين و قام بعده ابنه نجاح و امتنع الزيدية من بيعته
 فقال انا محتسب لله هذا ما بلغنا عنهم بمصر ايام المقام فيها و الله
 وارث الارض و من عليها

يقتلوا فاتكا فقتلوه سنة ثلاث و خمسين و خمسمائة و ملكوا عليهم
أحمد بن حمزة فلم يطق مقاومة على بن مهدي ففر عن زبيد
و ملكها ابن مهدي قال و كان عيسى بن حمزة أخو أحمد فى عثر من
حصون اليمن و منهم شانم بن يحيى ثم ذهب ملك بنى سليمان
من جميع التهام و الجبال و اليمن على يد بنى مهدي ثم ملكهم
بنو أيوب و قهروهم و استقرّ ملكهم آخرًا فى المنصور عبد الله ابن
أحمد بن حمزة قال ابن العديم و رث الملك بصعدة عن أبيه
و امتدت يده مع الناصر العباسى و كان يفاظرة و يبعث دعائه الى
الديلم و جيلان حتى خطب له هناك و صار له فيها ولاة و أنفق
الناصر عليه أموالا فى العرب باليمن و لم يظفر به قال ابن الاثير
جمع المنصور عبد الله بن احمد بن حمزة أمام الزيدية بصعدة سنة
ثنتين و تسعين و خمسمائة و زحف الى اليمن فخاف منه المعز بن
سيف الاسلام طغتكين بن ايوب ثم زحف اليه المعز فهزمه ثم جمع
ثانية سنة ثنتى عشرة و ستمائة جموعا من همدان و خولان و ارتجت
له اليمن و خاف المسعود بن الكامل و هو يومئذ صاحب اليمن
و معه الكرد و الترك و أشار أمير الجيوش عمر بن رسول بمعاجلته
قبل ان يملك الحصون ثم اختلف اصحاب المنصور و لقيه المسعود
فهزمه و توفى المنصور سنة ثلاثين و ستمائة عن عمر مديد و ترك ابنا
اسمه أحمد و لاه الزيدية و لم يخطبوا له بالامامة ينتظرون علو سنة
و استكمال شروطه و لما كانت سنة خمس و أربعين بايع قوم من
الزيدية بحصن تلا للموطى من بنى الرسى و هو أحمد بن الحسين
من بنى الهادى لانهم لما اخرجهم بنو سليمان من كرسى امامتهم

صعدة وتوفى سنة ثمان و تسعين لعشر سنين من ولايته هكذا قال
 ابن المجاب قال وله مصنفات فى الحلال و الحرام و قال غيره كان
 مجتهدا فى الاحكام الشرعية وله فى الفقه آراء غريبة و تواليف بين
 الشيعة معروفة قال الصولى و ولى بعده ابنه محمد المرتضى و اضطرب
 الناس عليه و هلك سنة عشرين و ثلثمائة لثنتين و عشرين سنة
 من ولايته و ولى بعده أخوه الناصر أحمد و استقام ملكه و اطرد فى
 بنيه بعده فولى بعده ابنه حسين المنتخب و مات سنة أربع
 و عشرين و ولى بعده أخوه القاسم المختار الى ان قتله ابو القاسم
 الضحاك الهمداني سنة أربع و أربعين و قال الصولى ولى من بنى
 الناصر الرشيد و المنتخب و المختار و المهدي و قال ابن حزم
 لما ذكر ولد أبى القاسم الرسى فقال و منهم القائمون بصعدة من
 ارض اليمن أولهم يحيى البادى له رأى فى الفقه و قد رأيتة و لم يبعد
 فيه عن الجماعة كل البعد كان لابيه أحمد الناصر بنون ولى منهم
 صعدة بعده جعفر الرشيد و بعده أخوه القاسم المختار ثم الحسن
 المنتخب و محمد المهدي قال و كان اليماني القائم بماردة سنة
 ثلاث و أربعين و ثلثمائة يذكر انه عبد الله بن أحمد الناصر أخو
 الرشيد و المختار و المنتخب و المهدي و قال ابن المجاب و لم تزل
 امامتهم بصعدة مطردة الى أن وقع الخلاف بينهم و جاء السليمانيون
 من مكة عند ما اخرجهم الهواشم فغلبوا عليهم بصعدة و انقرضت
 دولتهم بها فى المائة السادسة قال ابن سعيد و كان من بنى سليمان
 حين خرجوا من مكة الى اليمن أحمد بن حمزة بن سليمان
 فاستدعاه اهل زبيد لينصرهم على على بن مهدي الخارجى حين
 حاصرهم وبها فاتك بن محمد من بنى نجاح فاجابهم على أن

البلاد المضافة الى اليمن

اولها اليمامة قال البيهقى هو بلد منقطع بعمله والتحقق انه من
الحجاز كما هى نجران من اليمن وكذا قال ابن حوقل وهى دونها
فى المملكة وارضها تسمى العروض لاعتراضها بين الحجاز والبحرين
فى شريقها البحرين وغربها أطراف اليمن والحجاز وجنوبها نجران
وشمالها نجد من الحجاز وفى طولها عشرون مرحلة وهى على أربعة
ايام من مكة وقاعدتها حجر بالفتح وبلد اليمامة كانت مقرا لملوك
قبل بنى حنيفة ثم اتخذ بنو حنيفة حجرا وبينهما يوم و ليلة
وظواهرها أحياء من بنى يربوع من تميم وأحياء من بنى عجل
قال البكرى واسمها جو وسميت باسم زرقاء اليمامة سماها بذلك
تبع الآخر وهى فى الاقليم الثانى مع مكة وبعدهما عن خط الاستواء
واحد و من منازلها توضح و قرقرا و قال الطبرى ان رمل عالم بين
اليمامة والشحر وهى من أرض وبار وكانت اليمامة والطائف لبنى
هزان بن يعفر بن السكسك و غلبتهم عليها طسم و جديس ثم
غلب بنو هزان آخرا و ملكوا اليمامة و طسم و جديس فى تبعهم
و كان آخر ملوك بنى هزان قُرط بن جعفر فمات و غلبتهم طسم
على الملك و كان منهم تمليق و اخبارة معروفة ثم غلبت جديس

مخلاف يربوع من الجبال تغلب عليه بنو عبد الواحد بعد موت الحسن¹ بن سلامة و كان اهل الاطراف قد استبدوا على الثغور فقاتلهم الحسن¹ ابن سلامة حتى عادوا الى الطاعة و اختط مدينة الكدراء على مخلاف سهام و مدينة المعقر على وادى ذوال و مات سنة ثنتين و أربعمئة

بلاد كندة وهى من جبال اليمن مما يلي حضرموت و اجبر و الرمل و كان ليم بها ملوك و قاعدتهم كمنون ذكرها امرؤ القيس فى شعرة

سرى أخبار بنى الرسى

و اما قطابة فهو جبل شاهق شرقى صعدة و فيه حصن و قرى
و أنصوى اليه بنو البىدى عند ما غلبهم بنو سليمان على صعدة الى
ان كان ما ذكرناه

حراز و مسار اما حراز فهو اقليم من بلاد همدان و حراز بطن من
بطونهم كان منهم الصليحي و حصن مسار هو الذى ظهر فيه الصليحي
و هو من اقليم حراز قال البيهقى بلادهم شرقية بجبال اليمن و تفرقوا
فى الاسلام و لم تبقى لهم قبيلة و برية الا فى اليمن و هو أعظم قبائله
و بهم قام الموطنى و ملكوا جملة من حصون الجبال و لهم بها اقليم
بكيل و اقليم حاشد و هما ابنا جشم ابن حبان^١ بن نوف بن همدان
قال ابن حزم و من بكيل و حاشد افتقرت قبائل همدان انتهى
و من همدان بنو الزريع أصحاب السلطنة و الدعوة فى عدن و الجوة
و منهم بنو يام قبيل الصليحي و بنو همدان سبعة^٢ و هم الآن فى
نهاية من التشيع ببلادهم و أكثرهم زيدية

بلاد خولان قال البيهقى هى شرقية من جبال اليمن و متصلة
ببلاد همدان و هى حصون الجبال و مخالف جعفر دخلوا اليها فى
الدولة الصليحية و تغلب بنو الزرر منهم على حصن خدد و التكر
و غيرهما و هم أعظم قبائل اليمن مع همدان و لهم بطون كثيرة
و افترقوا على بلاد الاسلام و لم يبق منهم و برية الا باليمن

لداعى ابن المظفر و الداعى الزريعى الى أن بقى بيده حصن تعز
بأخذه منه ابن مهدي

معقل أشيخ من اعظم حصون الجبال و فيه خزائن بنى المظفر
و كان للداعى المنصور ابى حمير سبا بن أحمد بن المظفر من
الصليحيين صارت له بعبد المكرم ابن عمه صاحب ذى جبلة و قلده
المستنصر الدعوة و توفى سنة ست و ثمانين و أربعمئة و غلب ابنه
على على معاقل الملك أشيخ و أعيا المفضل أمره الى ان تحيل
عليه و قتله بالسّم و صارت حصون بنى المظفر لبنى أى البركات ثم
مات المفضل و خلف ابنه منصور و استقل بملك أبيه بعد حين
وباع جميع الحصون فباع ذا جبلة من الداعى الزريعى صاحب عدن
بمئة ألف دينار و حصن صبر بعد ان كان حلف بالطلاق على بيعه
فطلق زوجته الحرّة و تزوجها الزريعى و طال عمره ملك ابن عشرين
و بقى فى الملك ثمانين و أخذ منه معقل تعز على بن مهدي

صعدة مملكتها تلو مملكة صنعاء و هى فى شرقها و فى هذه
المملكة ثلاثة قواعد صعدة و جبل قطابة و حصن تلا¹ و حصون أخرى
و تعرف كلها ببني الرسى و قد تقدّم ذكر خبره

و اما حصن تلا¹ فمنه كان ظهور الموطئ الذى اعاد امامة الزيدية
لبني الرسى بعد ان استولى عليها بنو سليمان فأووا الى جبل قطابة
ثم بايعوا لأحمد الموطئ سنة خمس و أربعين و ستمئة و كان فقيها
عابدا و حاصره نور الدين بن رسول فى هذا الحصن سنة ثم جمر عليه
عسكرا للحصار ثم مات ابن رسول سنة ثمان و أربعين و شغل ابنه

صغيرين هما محمد و أبو السعود فحبسهما ياسر بن بلال فى القصر
و استبد بالمر و كان ياسر ممدحا كثير العطية للشعراء و ممن وفد
عليه و مدحه ابن قلاؤس شاعر الاسكندرية و من قصائده فى مدحه

سافر اذا حاولت قدرا سار الهلال فصار بدرا

و هو آخر ملوك الزرّيعيين و لما دخل شمس الدولة سيف الاسلام
أخو صلاح الدين الى اليمن سنة ست و ستين و ستمائة و استولى
عليها جاء الى عدن فملكها و قبض على ياسر بن بلال و انقطعت
دولة بنى زريع و صار اليمن للعثمانيين و فيه ولاتهم بنو أيوب كما نذكر فى
أخبارهم و كانت مدينة الجوّة قرب عدن اختطها ملوك الزرّيعيين
فلما جاءت دولة بنى أيوب تركوها و نزلوا تعز من الجبال كما
يأتى ذكره

اخبار ابن مهدي الخارجى و بنيه و ذكر دولتهم باليمن

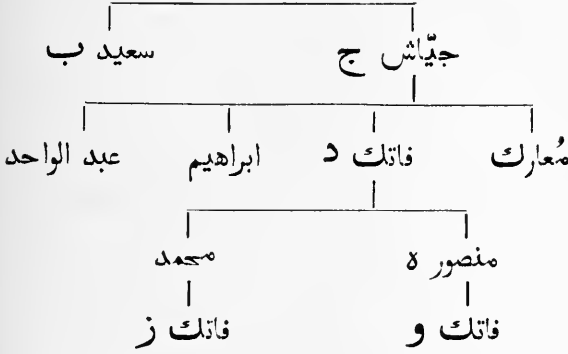

بدايتها و انقراضها

هذا الرجل من اهل العنبرة من سواحل زبيد و هو على بن مهدي
الحميرى كان أبوه مهدي معروفا بالصلاح و الدين و نشأ ابنه على
طريقته فاعتزل و نسك ثم حجّ و لقي علماء العراق و أخذ الوعظ
من وعاظهم و عاد الى اليمن و اعتزل و لزم الوعظ و كان حائظا فصيحاً
و يخبر بحوادث أحواله فيصدق فمال اليه الناس و اغتبطوا به و صار
يتردد للحجّ منذ سنة احدى و ستين و يعظ الناس فى البوادي فاذا
حضر الموسم اتاه على نجيب له و لما استولت أم فاتك على بنى
جياش ايام ابنها فاتك بن منصور أحسنت فيه المعتقد و أطلقت
له و لقرايته و أصحاره خرجهم فحسنت أحوالهم و آثروا و ركبوا الخيول

 مهدي الخارجى من قتله فى المسجد و هو يصلى العصر يوم الجمعة
 ثانى عشر صفر سنة احدى و خمسين و ثار الناس بذلك الشيطان
 القاتل فقتل جماعة من اهل المسجد ثم قُتِلَ و اضطرب موالى ال نجاح
 بالدولة و ثار عليهم على بن مهدي الخارجى و حاربهم مرارا و حاصرهم
 طويلا و استغاثوا بالشريف المنصور احمد بن حمزة السليماني و كان
 يملك صعدة فاغاثهم على ان يملكوه و يقتلوا سيدهم فاتك بن محمد
 فقتلوه سنة ثلاث و خمسين و ملكوا عليهم الشريف أحمد فعجز عن
 مقاومة ابن مهدي و فرّ تحت الليل و ملكها على بن مهدي سنة
 أربع و خمسين و انقرض أمر آل نجاح و البقاء لله

قري حرازو يقال انه كان عنده كتاب الجفر من ذخائر ائمتهم بزعمهم
 فزعموا ان عليا ابن القاضى محمد مذكور فيه فقراً على على عامل
 الداعى وأخذ عنده ولما توسم فيه الاهلية أراه مكان اسمه فى الجفر
 وأوصافه و قال لابيه القاضى احتفظ بابنك فسيملك جميع اليمن
 فنشا فقيها صالحا و جعل يحج بالناس على طريق الطائف و السروات
 خمس عشرة سنة فطار ذكره و عظمت شهرته و ألقى على ألسنة الناس
 انه سلطان اليمن و مات الداعى عام الزواحي فوصى له بكتبه و عهد
 اليه بالدعوة ثم حج بالناس سنة ثمان و عشرين و اربعمائة على عادته
 و اجتمع فى الموسم بجماعة من قومه همدان كانوا معه فدعاهم الى
 النصرة و القيام معه فاجابوه و بايعوه و كانوا ستين رجلا من رجالات
 قومه فلما عادوا قام فى مسار و هو حصن بذروة جبل حراز و حصن
 ذلك الحصن و لم ينزل امره ينمى و كتب الى المستنصر صاحب
 مصر يسأله الاذن فى اظهار الدعوة فأذن له و اظهرها و ملك اليمن
 كله و نزل صنعاء و اختط بها القصور و أسكن عنده ملوك اليمن الذين
 غلب عليهم و هزم بنى طرف ملوك عثر و تهامة و أعمل الحيلة
 فى قتل نجاح مولى بنى زياد ملك زبيد حتى تم له ذلك على
 يد جارية أهداها اليه كما ذكرناه سنة ثنتين و خمسين ثم سار الى
 مكة بأمر المستنصر صاحب مصر ليمحو منها الدعوة العباسية و الامارة
 الحسينية و استخلف على صنعاء ابنه المكرم أحمد و حمل معه زوجته
 أسماء بنت شهاب و الملوك الذين معه مثل ابن الكرندي و ابن
 يعفر التبعي و وايل بن عيسى الوحاظي و امثالهم فبيته سعيد بن

و هذا تأريخ اليمن المنقول من كتاب العبر
للعلامة عبد الرحمن ابن خلدون المغربي

اخبار اليمن و الدول الاسلاميه التي كانت فيه للعباسيين
و للبيديين و سائر ملوك العرب و ابتداء ذلك و تصاريقه على
الجملة ثم تفصيل ذلك على مدنه و ممالكه واحدة بعد واحدة

قد تقدم لنا في اخر السير النبوية كيف صار اليمن في ملكة الاسلام
بدخول عامه في الدعوة الاسلامية و هو باذان عامل كسرى و أسلم
معها أهل اليمن و أمرة النبي صلى الله عليه و سلم على جميع
مخاليقها و كان منزله صنعاء كرسى التبابعة و انه مات بعد حجة الوداع
فقسم النبي صلى الله عليه و سلم اليمن على عمال من قبله و جعل
صنعاء لابنه شهر بن باذان و ذكرنا خبر الاسود العنسي و كيف أخرج
عمال النبي صلى الله عليه و سلم من اليمن و زحف الى صنعاء
فملكها و قتل شهر بن باذان و تزوج امراته و استولى على أكثر اليمن
و ارتد أكثر أهلها و كتب النبي صلى الله عليه و سلم الى أصحابه
و عماله و الى من ثبت على اسلامه فدخلوا زوجة شهر بن باذان
التي تزوجها في أمرة على يد ابن عمها فيروز و تولى كبر ذلك
قيس بن عبد يغوث المرادي فبيته هو و فيروز و دانويه باذان زوجته
و قتلوه و رجع عمال النبي صلى الله عليه و سلم الى أعمالهم و ذلك
قبيل الوفاة و استبد قيس بصنعاء و جمع الفل من جند الاسود فولى
أبو بكر على اليمن فيروز فيمن اليه من الابداء و أمر الناس بطاعة
